THEIR PARTING

BY MAUDE ANDREWS.

Her living-room was by all odds the most at-tractive in Washington that winter, and the woman herself, since taking up her abode in that city, had held a place in its social life peculiarly her own.

Her husband was a New York millionaire a man who had made his fortune in Wall street, and who knew and cared for nothing outside of business speculations.

She was young, and at this moment looking like the princess in a fairy tale as she lounged in a great bronze velvet chair by the open fireplace. Her gown was of dull green silk, bro-caded in tiny pink flowers. The high puffed, green velvet sleeves, with their creamy frills of delicate lace, displayed a pair of round, slender white arms and long thin hands sparkling with rings. The tall, white throat rose up from its filmy lace ruffling like a white lily ste above sea foam. The face was lily fair and lily frame-work for the white forehead, whose temples were definitely veined with delicate blue lines. The dark, delicate brows overarched the lids like white rose leaves; from beneath these long fringes gleamed a pair of languid, sapphire eyes. The full, red mouth drooped at the corners, and the oval face was unto marble paleness. She was a tall woman, and slender without being thin. She with a start as the door was softly opened to admit a tall man, who entered astily and came to greet her with a nervous, sionate eagerness.

"It was kind of you," he said, in his quick, fine voice, "to give your butler orders to let me come right up. I hope you are at home to no one else this morning?"
"No. You wrote that you wished to see me alone. Sit down," she herself sinking into the chair she had vacated.

As he took the one beside her the long, magnificent room seemed to have grown small in his presence. She gave an amused little

"What is it?" he asked.
"I was just thinking one ought to receive your visits on the top of Mount Ætna." "Why?"

"Because you are so lofty and so impressive and so impulsive. You'd make the Crystal palace seem diminutive." "I don't seem to awe von."

"No, Sampson didn't awe Delilah. Now, I don't mean to compare myself to Delilah, or you to Sampson in his mad passion for her. I simply mean that you are a man and I am the woman you like best, and that no woman is awed by the man who prefers her above all

He bent over her and compelled her to look up into the light of his dark, deep eyes. "Why don't you say loves above all others?" he asked beneath his breath.

"I didn't think it sounded so well," she answered, guiltily.
"It makes no difference how it sounds. It is the truth, and I have come to tell it to you.' She started to arise, but he laid his hand commandingly upon her arm.

commandingly upon her arm.

"Don't go-don't say anything—until I baye said all I wish to say," he half demanded, half implored. "I do not mean you any farm. I wou d not insult your fair wor allood by one cowardly persuasion or sug for on. I came today to tell you that I leave twashington tomorrow. I am appointed Nanister to Austria." Her face grew pained and wondering. She repeated the words mechanically after him. "Yes," he went on. "I have been trying to Nothing else," she said, conclusively. host men speak out their souls on their deathbeds: that is, if reason is with them, I may be out of reason, but this is my death-

"Is it?" she said, in the tender mother-tone women use to men they love.
"You know it is," he answered. "I don't know why I s'nould say all this to you, save that I am hopelessly unhappy."

"I wish I could comfort you," she answered, "but I can't comfort myself. Oh! I have tried hard, so hard, all these years. I've filled my life with everything I'd been taught to hold dear, and the filling of it with these things has made it all the emptier. I was launched money, position, social honors, were the things which gave happiness. I believed it until I had a surfeit of them all. I am tired. I wish I could go away to some strange land and never know anything of the life I live or the people I know now."

"If I were a novel hero"—with a strained, cold smile—"I would clasp strained, cold smile—"I would clasp wou in my arms and beg you to fly with me."

"And if I were a novel heroine," she answered, "I would consent and we would run away, like the folks Ouida depicts, and live happy forever after. Instead, I am an honest, respectable woman. If I were free to marry you I should do so and we would live a life as perfect as any on earth could be. As it is, if I ran away with you I would ruin my own nature, disgrace my family and my husband, and wreck your future ambition and success. No matter where we went our story would and wreck your future ambition and success. No matter where we went our story would follow us. When men looked at me askance and regarded you as unworthy, a hand-clasp, would we find all perfect compensation in each other's love?"

"No," he said sadly. "It would not. Love is the only God-given emotion man has. It must be founded on truth and honor. It cannot live otherwise."

must be founded on truth and honor. It cannot live otherwise."

"Why wasn't fate kind to me?" she questioned lifting her great eyes sadly to his own.

"Why did I marry like a child that gives kisses for baubles. I had not reached the growth of my nature. I regarded marriage as a necessity, all in the drama of a woman's life. I made in the height of my belleship the best marriage of the season. I thought myself blessed. My husband was kind and indulgent. It might have been my inclination to love him now at twenty-five, if I had not married him. As it is, I never loved him at all, and now I find I love something else. I need something else. My nature, thy life, my heart is crying for you. I knew it from the moment your hand touched mine and your eyes looked down into my own. If I had not seen you again my life would have dwelt with that knowledge as it does now."

"Don't talk to me this way," he said, his lips quivering beneath the long, dark mustache. "I meant to be calm, and it is so hard I had to tell you all. I felt it must be done someway, and I knew it could not do either of us any harm. I'm not the kind of a man to love a woman who would sin for me. I could forgive her sin easier than I could her willingness to let her lover dishonor her by dishonoring his manhood. I have listened to a lot of talk about leve being excuse for all sins, but I could never believe it. If the world thought that way, there'd be no trust, no stability in anything. What is wrong for one human being, is not right for another. Still, there must be reget someway. Because a man refrains from the temptation of stealing, it does not make the temptation any less alluring. I am going away from you—giving you up of my own will and your own, yet I shall always want you—shall always know my life to be spoiled because of the lack of you."

"But you have more to fill your days than I," she said. "You have work, ambition, your life has in those things so much to keep it koing. I have before me the same old round of balls and teas, the same choosing of gowns and jewels each season. I have tried, since I knew you, to forget you by finding something which I might regard as duties. I have thought more of my busband's comfort and pleasur, out his pleasure is so prosaic and his comfort

"There is nothing else to talk of," he said rising quickly, as if impelled to depart. "I must go. We have had our last talk. I shall not see you again." She, too, arose and stood beside him, her lips and down-cast eyes a-tremble. He knelt and kissed her feet and in the waning evening light, like the shadow of a great hope passed from the room.

A HUMAN CYCLONE.

The Perils of Conveying a Party of Convict

From the New York Herald. It isn't the pleasantest thing in the world to travel with a convict. It is still less agreeable to have as your compagnon du voyage a luna tic who is liable to break out and be violent at any moment. But I think the worst of all is to have a collection of convict "luneys" under your charge even for a short journey, for, mad as they are, most of them know that they prisoners and enemies of society, and they ouple with this knowledge all the reckle which insanity brings. They are apt to be which insanity brings. They are apt to be both dangerous and ugly.

We were transferring six prisoners of this variety from Utica to Auburn. There were eleven in the party, four keepers besides the doctor, a slender young fellow and something of a dude in appearance, with his fine clothes and gold-rimmed eyeglasses, which he pronounced "glawses," but a good man for all that, brave as a lion, and with muscle like steel springs on his athletic arms.

It was hard to say who was the most ner-that, brave as a lion, and with muscle like steel springs on his athletic arms.

It was hard to say who was the most nervous of the party—the mad-men, excited by their change of base, the keepers, knowing well the perils of the enterprise, or the young doctor, keen and alert, on whose shoulders rested the responsibility for safely delivering his charge within the walls of the insane pavilion at Auburn.

On the station platform at Utica, one of the men, the most dangerous character of all, broke loose and started to run away. Instantly all four of the keepers jumped upon him and after a most tremendous struggle threw him down and overpowered him, while the doctor, after sweeping the other with a lightning-like glance and bidding the in a low tone of authority to stand per bay still, whipped out a pocket-case with the standard man. In a moment or two he had become more tranquil.

"Now, get up," said the doctor, "and do not make us any more trouble."

make us any more trouble."

The keepers relaxed their hold and the "luney" sullenly obeyed. It was wonderful what effect the cool manner and the strong will of the little doctor had upon these misshapen minds. It was like oil on troubled waters shapen minds. It was like oil on troubled waters.

There was no further trouble until we reached Syracuse. The dangerous patient had been very quiet since his first outbreak, suspiciously so the doctor thought, who asked him several times how he felt, if he felt all right, and so forth. In the cars he was between his keeper and the window, and really had no chance for mischief. But as they were getting off the cars at Syracuse his opportunity came, and he took it like a flash. With a quick blow he knocked the keeper off the car platform and down on the station, then he was off upon the other side and running the car platform and down on the station, then he was off upon the other side and running like a deer along the railroad track. The Chicago limited was coming down the track at a fast pace, and I expected that the locomotive would forever settle that troublesome patient, for it caught him in a narrow place where he could not turn neither to the right nor left, but, with all a madman's cuming, he lay down close to the rails just in the nick of time and was passed by unharmed.

But what was that upon his heels—a streak of lightning? No, it was the young doctor, and running like the hound that overtakes the deer. He escaped the limited by throwing himself flat against the fence, and then before the other had time to scramble up and be off again he was on him with furious energy. He caught the fellow by the scuff of the neck, gave him a twist and sent him spinning like a peg top crash against the fence. Then he had gave him a twist and sent him spinning like a peg top crash against the fence. Then he had him down, and was jumping on the prostrate body till the fellow howled for mercy. Cruel? Brutal? Well, perhaps it was, but I, who had seen the whole business, and knew how quickly the mad-man would stick a knife in him if he got the chance, I could not blame him for harsh measures.

A moment later the fellow was again in the hands of a keeper. The worships was an

"That is the most terrible task of any that I have to do," he said. "In transferring 'luneys' I am always possessed by the expectation that one of them will break loose and kill somebody. It is not for myself that I fear, but for some harmless and unsuspecting passenger. I would rather carry a load of dynamite on the cars than half a dozen of those fellows."

Young Man, Paste This in Your Hat. In a conversation one day in his office in this

"One of the troubles with young men who procure situations is that they will not live within their income. They have an idea that the man for whom they work, likes to hear of their living well and dressing in fashion. As to the living well, that is all right if they can afford it. But they can't do it on the salaries on which most young men have to begin. A young man such as I speak of can't take his lunches and dinners at the hotels, cafes and Kinsley's. He can't smoke expensive cigars and wear a flower in his buttonhole. He can't buy theater tickets very often, and he can't take his sweetheart out to dinner. And any young man who does these things thinking that his employer doesn't know it is very much mistaken. The business career of that young man will be cut down early in its youth."

Dr. Bull's Worm Destroyers are not new and untried. For thirty years they have stood the test of usage, and their large sale is due to merit only.

After leaving the institute for the camp.

enthused with the ardor of youth and patriotism, he rushed to the front in June, 1861.

Never having had any fondness for walking, and thinking a horse could run faster than a man, he got in the third regiment of Georgia cavalry in 1862. In the battle of his horse was shot under him and he retreated ate at the idea of again joining the infantry and, being naturally ingenious, he began lay-ing "schemes" to get another horse. When his last effort was about to be rewarded with failure he passed a farm-house in Kentucky and saw a pony-looking animal in the lot. It was a poor chance, compared with the then fine looking horses in his regiment, but he was dead against walking, and pressed the beast into service, under the then existing confederate law—the farmer was not at home. The pony was what would seem a mixture between what we now know as a "Texas pony and a mule," both in disposition and looks. John Walter soon found that the animal had the capacity, not only to "take the studs," but would also take the opposite view of life, and run without control for nothing but to be mean Days passed on. In the march "Julep" as either behind or in front of the regiment, mostly behind; John Walter named im "Julep" for short, leaving of "mint."

On the morning before the battle at Perryville, Ky., something appeared to be in the wind. The officers looked serious. The youthful John Walter looked serious. It was presented to be a presen ently whispered that an unpleasant engagement was expected. John Walter nervously stuck his specs in the sides of Julep to see if he was in prime. Julep had just made up his mind to "stand pat" and never moved a mus-cle. This bluffed John Walter somewhat. He hoped when the music started it might re-vive him—music being a great aid to revive Julep's spirits. The order soon came to "fall in," and to John Walter's surprise Julep, inspired by the movement of the other horses, fell in and forward-marched when the order came. Not a mile in front the enemy was advancing and soon came in sight. "Halt," was Julep halted but John Walter was trembling, for the thought was just breaking in on his mind, "suppose Julep don't halt."

The battle commenced with the infantry and raged furiously. The cavalry was soon brought into play and a deadly volley was poured into the enemy. Julep never budged. The enemy faltered at the deadly onslaught of the cavalry, but soon rallied again. The battle was now awful. Wounded and dead men were falling on every side and victory hung in the balance. The smoke was rising above the soldier's heads and another volley was soon expected. At this moment, from some unaccountable cause, Julep made a lunge to the front with the bit between his teeth; there was no stopping him. John Walter's face was pale and an expectation of death was stamped upon his fixed features, which his comrades took for a brave determination, and followed in his rear with a shout. The enemy seeing the determined and daring approach gave way and kept retreating until Julep stop-ped amidst the well-known shout of victory John Walter was the hero. His commander sent a special notice to headquarters com-mending his courage and brave leadership, and special notice with compliments to John Wal-ter. He was promoted at once for this brave conduct. This is how he became Captain Robison. He heard it all with sealed lips, ever and anon casting a sly look at Julep.

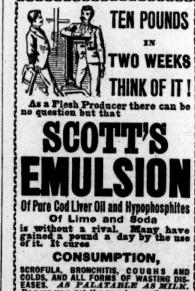

Sometime after this, on retreat, the regiment passed the farm-house, and the farmer was at home. John Walter offered to swap Julep for the excellent horse the farmer had ridden off the day he got Julep, and to give big boot. The old farmer, recognizing Julep, told John Walter that he had been hesitating a long time about killing the beast with his shot-gun, that it was the only horse flesh he had ever seen that would work nowhere, would suck seen that would work nowhere, would suck eggs and eat chickens besides.

Having heard this story about John Walter's promotion, I asked him if it was true. He smiled a broad smile, like President Cleveland smiles, and said he was in a hurry.

One evening Daisy Price, Weston Patterson, John Walter and myself, were eating supperat Pretzels—somebody else set up—and I asked John Walter about his promotion again. I knew he was not in a hurry now. He was feeling well and told us all about it. We learned then that the whole incident as written above is the truth.

Captain Robison has never married and is considered the philosopher of the Macon bar. This is written to do justice to a brave soldier.

Raising chickens and raising men is another raticle that suggests something well worth at-tention. "Painting on Poultry," develops into an art more divine. Haroun Bey.

Here is a bright Frenchman's story which shows how freedom is not always free in la belle France.

The contrast between the center of civiliza tion and the conditions of the orient seems to he more of kind than of degree.

We preserve the outward forms of civilization and freedom very often when the substance has vanished. Here is the story of Haroun Bey, written by

Jules Simon :

"Haroun Bey was a Turk, an Albanian by birth, an Armenian Christian in religion. On completing brilliantly his studies in the College Charlemagne and in the Ecole Centrale he buried himself in Albania in a magnificent lege Charlemagne and in the Eccie Centrale he buried himself in Albaniain a magnificent palace between the sea and the mountains. Though he had but one wife, he was constrained to maintain a sham harem; for in Turkey, while celibacy rouses suspicion of libertinism, monogamy brands the wealthy Bey with the deeper stigma of Christianity. Haroun pined for freer conditions, and after the French republic was established, crying 'Ubi libertas ibi patria,' he migrated to Paris with his wife and her companions. His first thought was to rear a beautiful chapel for the Nestorian rite. The ministry of the interior refused permission. He projected an imposing procession of Armenian Christians that would attract the attention of Paris. But no—at the moment of dissolving the congregations and putting churches under seals, the government could not afford to give religious assemblages the liberty enjoyed by electoral caucuses and sacialist clubs. 'What harm can they find in if?' he asked me, and I told him that they were afraid that his 150 Armenians would upset the government in going to mass, just as they were that 150 Jesuiis would disturb the set the government in going to mass, just as they were that 150 Jesuits would disturb the state by teaching Greek roots. In reference to his supposed second and third wives and the band of odalisques in his Oriental household, his friend informed him that no one could interfere unless his legitimate wife should make complaint. He took his son to the Lyceum of Charlemagne, his old college, telling the headmaster that he did not wish him to study Latin, and was surprised to learn that he had no voice in the matter, as the curriculum rests on the decision of the minister of public instruction. Being a foreigner he could, if he wished, allow his boy to grow up in ignorance; but if he were a Frenchman he would be compelled to have him taught singing, modeling and military drill. Bringing laborers from his own country, he was told that he must pay them sixty centimes an hour, according to the scale of wages approved by the municipal council, and a few days later he was called to the prefecture, and ordered to send back to their homes three hundred of his six hundred Albanian workmen, and hire Frenchmen in their stead, for a regulation had been adopted forbidding industrial employers to have more than one-third of their force foreigners. The magistrate said that the number of foreign workmen permitted set the government in going to mass, just as they were that 150 Jesuits would disturb the to have more than one-third of their force foreigners. The magistrate said that the number of foreign workmen permitted might be diminished by future regulations to one-fourth or one-tenth, and that if the men should protest against the employment of any foreigners, and should go on strike, he would do best to yield at once, as the municipal council would vote money to support the strikers. His men were accustomed to work eleven hours per kay till a committee waited on him and informed him that nine hours was the working-day. He insisted that those who chose to earn the pay for eleven hours should be permitted to do so, but was told that it was impossible, and that in the labor exchange the subject was discussed of reducing the work-day to seven hours. An overseer, disobeying express instructions in order to make a small profit, swung a-mason's scaffold with old rope, and in consequence was himself thrown to the ground and injured. Haroun, who procured medical attendance and supplied the family with money, was dismayed at being summoned before the criminal court, and condemned to pay a heavy indemnity for an accident that was the employe's own fault. This demned before the crimmal court, and condemned to pay a heavy indemnity for an accident that was the employe's own fault. This was too much. He threw up the great public contract that he had undertaken, and returned to Albania. 'Liberty,' he exclaimed, 'I find nowhere. You Frenchmen are governed and regulated to death.' 'You are wrong,' I made reply. 'I may dislike the measures of the government. I may be dragged before the courts, and unjustly condemned. Still the judges were nominated by the minister of justice, and the minister of justice by the president of the republic, the president of the republic was elected by the two chambers in congress, and the members of the two chambers were chosen by the electoral bodies of the French people, in which I have the right of suffrage. All these people form the constituted powers, and I am one ten-millionth of the power that constitutes them. I form a part of the sovereign authority. 'I may be gagged and plundered and imprisoned, yet

Raising Chickens and Raising Men.

Raising Chickens and Raising Men.

In his Century article on "Chickens for Use and Beauty," Mr. H. S. Babcock says some interest strained and the United States, the bulk of the Dominion of the rainbow on the peacock's feather.

This idea, somewhat more in detail, is expressed in the following paragraph:
There has been, during the last quarter of a century a remarkable improvement in domestic poultry. The motley array of fowls varying in size and color, as uncertain in marking as a tep pattern of a craxy-quilt, and creating an impression as distinctively favorable as that which the ranged followers of Falstaff produced, has given place to well-defined breeds, carefuly differentiated into varieties, with colors as rich in hue and as regularly disposed as if laid on by the hand of the artist. The fancier, to whom we are indebted for this wonderful transformation, is mideed an artist, working not in lifeless clay and dead pigments, but in animate bodies and living colors. Under his hand the unartractive has become attractive, ugliness has yielded to beauty. But his work has not ended with this external transformation; the inner and practical qualities have undergone a similar change; productiveness has been increased, weight augmented, fattening power improved. Such fowls as are bred today are not only more beautiful, but more profitable than those of twenty-five years ago. This increased profitableness has produced a new industry—the raising of chickens and eggs for market as a sole employment. With the old-time fewls such an industry would have been folly, but with the modern fowl it has proved a success. This improvement in external characteristics and

Haroun Bey is the story Jules Simon wrote | useful qualities has been made possible through useful qualities has been made possible through that mysterious power of indefinite variations which the hen possesses. ada and the United States.

There are a great many interesting things suggested by this article on poultry. For in-stance, the black minorcas, black through a long series of registered generations, and entirely free from suspicion of a cross, suddenly produce a pure white fowl. There is in the heredity of animals and human beings something suggestive of that inexplicable law of chemical union by which diverse elements are joined together to produce a new substance different from its constituent parts, sometimes possessed of their physical properties, some-times developing qualities entirely new and never apparent in the original elements. Frequently in chemical union composite substances unite and exhibit strongly in their further combination some quality which had appeared away back in some element that entered into the former combination. This is very like what occurred in the white fowl sprung from black minorcas. A wonderful example of this kind occurred recently in Atlanta, where human heredity asserted itself in the third generation. A child was born with jet-black hair. Both its parents were pronounced blondes, and the maternal grandmother and great-grandmother were blondes but the paternal grandfather and great-grand-father were dark-haired men.

This chicken article shows how in only twenty-five years the character and appearance of poultry have been radically changed and vastly improved. This shows what a vast improvement there will be in the human race when avarice ceases to bring about marriages against which natural affection protests. Happily the Creator has planted in our breasts a most potent law of natural selection which generally triumphs over avarice. There is much more reason in social caste than the thoughtless would allow; for be they rich or poor, the people whose ancestors for generations have lived lives that developed their character, intellect and physique, have a heritage which money cannot buy, and nothing but their own bad living can take away. The gentlemanly or ungentle-manly debauchee is contributing to the degradation of his offspring, as sure as the laws of sowing and reaping. Happily parents' short-comings do not fall with all their force upon their children, and the evil results, like the good, are cumulative through generations; but "As the bird by wandering and as the swallow by flying, so the curse causeless will not

TO MAY.

May, thou month of rosy beauty,
Month, when pleasure is a duty!
Month of maids that milk the kine,
Bosom rich, and bearin divina:
Month of bless, and month of flowers,
Month of blossom-laden bowers;
Month of little hands with daisies,
Lovers' love, and poets' praises;
O thou merry month complete,
May thy very name is sweet!
May was maid in olden times.
And is still in Scottish rhymes;
May's the blooming hawthorn bough;
May's the month that's laughing now.

I no sooner write the word,
Than it seems as though it heard,
And looks up and laughs at me,
Like a sweet face, rosily,
Like an actual color bright,
Flushing from the paper's white;
Like a bride that knows her power,
Started in a summer bower.

Canada and the United States. Professor Goldwin Smith, in The Forum, replies to some things Sir Charles Dilke says ada in his book, "The Problems of Greater Britain," and from what follows it will he seen that he takes issue broadly with the English statesman, even going so far to deny that there is a greater Britain. He maintains that while on the political man Canada appears as a continental strip extendcanada appears as a continental strip extending from the boundary of the United States to the Arctic circle, equal in area to this country and forming that bulwark against democratic government for which British tories sigh, it is in fact a comparatively narrow strip of habitable land, divided into provinces by natural barriers, and divided as to its English population by a French settle-ment, which all the time becomes more marked in its nationality. But it is worth while to reproduce his words

But it is worth while to reproduce his words on this point. He says:

The physical map will show the four distinct blocks of which the Dominion consists—the maritime provinces, separated from old Canada, French and British, by a wide and irreclaimable wilderness; old Canada, separated by another wilderness and a fresh-water sea from Manitoba and the northwest; the northwest, again, by a triple chain of mountains from British Columbia; while each is physically united to the portion of the United States immediately to the south of fir. The ethnological map will show that the line of British provinces is cut in two by a French community, the nationality of which grows daily stronger and sharper. The economical map will show that instead of the vast expanse there is only a belt, and along the greater part of the line a comparatively narrow belt, of habitable and cultivable land, broken, moreover, into sections by the wildernesses or other natural barriers which divide province from province. If lines of trade could be defineated, it would futher appear that there is hardly any commerce, of a natural kind at least, between the provinces, while each of them is commercially identified with the country to the south of it on the other side of the line. If there was no custom-houses between Canada and the United States, the bulk of the Dominion trade—indeed, comparatively speaking, the whole of it—would be done by the Canadians with their

Whatover can be done to fight nature with political railways, Canada, or rather her tory government, is assuredly doing; but what railways car reverse natural tendencies so strong as these?

Professor Smith's argument has great force. Nature has not made continents in vain. There are many reasons why they should be controlled by one government—not an imperial government, but a federation, that elastic form which combines the strength of union in great and common interests with the union in great and common interests with the comfort of home rule in local affairs.

The bearing of physics upon politics is just beginning to be understood, but we have learned enough to know that the government of the great arid regions of the west must be shaped to fit the drainage basins in order that water may be equitably distributed for irrigations. tion. In several instances rivers flow across the border and international disputes are like-ly to arise. It is also understood that the protection of agriculture depends largely upon control of neighboring forests, which affect both the rain-fall and the regularity of water supply. Floods are known to follow the cutting away of forests. The weather bureaus of the world will never reach a high degree of efficiency until they embrace whole continents under one head with special departments where nature sets the boundaries by topographical and other influences tha

The productions of a continent form a con bination harmoniously devised and differentiated by nature, with a myriad of products related to in the wants of the society developed on such a continent. The world is more apt to be governed by continents than by zones Society requires the products, not of the temperate or any other one zone, but of the tropics and the frigid zones as well, and perhaps the finest, best rounded specimens of the race, intellectually, morally and physically, are those who have been fed, body, mind and soul, on osmopolitan food.

ose who talk lightly of annexation will do well to consider this phase of the question. It is the broad basis laid by nature, and the permanent one, on which the matter will be finally settled.

The German Emperor's Idea.

The German Emperor's Idea.

From the London Spectate r.

It will be some time before any of us, whether Germans or outsiders, even think we thoroughly understand the character of the German emperor. One leading thought, however, in the emperor's mind begins to be tolerably clear. He has conceived the idea of kingship in its older form, combining the right to lead with the right to forbid and to regulate, is still possible. This idea shines out through the whole of the emperor's proceedings in relation to labor; it comes out with still greater clearness in his general order peremptorily commanding all officers to behave more kindly to their men, and threatening to punish tyranny with exand threatening to punish tyranny with exemplary severity, and it seems to us to be the very root of the recent imperial rescript about luxury and exclusiveness in the army. He does not propose to have his military organization impaired by so much attention to questions of birth and fortune.

To understand the greatness of the change which this order introduces, we must recall one of the traditional rules of the Prussian army. Theoretically, birth has in that army no claim, but practically no man can either enter it or rise in it without the consent of his brother efficiers and exceeding the friends army and exceeding the first army and exceeding the exceeding the first army and exceeding the exceeding enter it or rise in it without the consent of his brother officers, and especially of his commanding officer, who in this regard is the virtual president of a close corporation, which sends in lists to the final authority. This system increases brotherhood in the corps, but it develops that demeanor towards the men against which the emperor recently protested, it immensely dimishes the reserve of officers, and it is hopelessly opposed to every modern idea.

The opposed waaps it summarily away. And this is not by a quiet, confidential circular, but by a public rescript by which he must stand, and which is understood to be so fully meant that four commandants of high rank, unable to endure what they think almost a degredation of their corps d'elite have sent in their resignations.

Southern Women in New York.

From a New York Letter. Mrs. Emma Moffitt Tyng is a brilliant example Miss, Emma Momiti Tyng is a brilliant example of the success of southern women in the metropolis. Many persons who have read with delight the charming articles on "Interior Household Decoration," in the Art Exchange, know the authoress to be the wife of an eminent lawyer of New York, Thomas Mitchell Tyng, a son of the Rev. Dr. Stephen Tyng. Not everyone knows, however, that she is a daughter of the south, who, as Engag. I. Moffitt works two provides however, that she is a daughter of the south, who, as Enima L. Mofflitt, wrote two novels when living in Columbus, Ga., which twenty years ago were widely read and favorably received. One of these, "The Crown Diamonds," Mrs. Tyng is now engaged in revising, intending to bring it out in the autumn in an improved and condensed form. It is the story of the reign of Maximilian in Mexico, and is a work of great historical interest. The book contained something in the nature of a resolutive tained something in the nature of a prophety tamed something in the nature of a prophety, which in the light of subsequent events has a curious interest. Miss Moffit, in an imaginary interview between the Empress Carlotta and Napoleon III, makes Carlotta beg the emperor not to withdraw the French troops from Mexico, thus leaving her husband to his fate. If he does so she declares the prince imperial will never the one of France. Fight years after the body were throne of France. Eight years after this book was written, when the exiled prince was in Africa, the prophecy was fulfilled.

Mrs. Tyng, when living in England, wrote a series of articles on English universities, which are still often quoted. She has a beautiful apart-ment in the "Stirling," on Fifth avenue, and she relates how, when a girl living in her old ivyclad home in Georgia, she used to lie awake an listen to the roar of the trains rushing northward, and wonder if she would ever visit any of those strange lands she had read of so longingly. Now, after years of travel in Europe, where she had met and mingled with famous people, Mrs. Tyng says she often sits at the windows of her New York home, which looks upon the southern sky, and wonders if she will ever again know the delight of living in a quiet

A charming young lady from Atlanta, Miss Ellen M. Powell, is at present visiting Mrs. Tyng. She is the pupil of Ernani, and the possessor of a beautiful voice. That this is not her only accomplishment is proved by the fact that a book by her, entitled "Clio," will be brought out by the Lovell company next month. Lovell company next month.

The Great Irrigation Problem.

The government has at its disposal a vast domain of 100,000,000 acres, which is now barren, but will be exceedingly fertile after irrigation. This work will cost about ten dollars an acre, and the land after irrigation will be worth at least fifty dollars. The field is so inviting that the capital is sare to be forthcoming, and then the vast tracts of the richest land on the continent will be disposed

Now the question is, who will get it, the rich or the poor? Will it be di vided out among the people, or will a few millionaires gobble it up?

How to prevent the latter contingency is the most serious part of the irrigation problem.
The territorial land laws are inadequate. The subject is altogether different from ordinary subject is altogether different from ordinary land legislation, and far more difficult. Real state transactions are hard enough to regulate so as to promote justice and development at the same time; but when the problem is complicated by running water, which must be divided out among the land-owners of the whole water-shed so that each may get his fair share of the indispensable days the difficulties of adjustment are not as a superscript of the difficulties of adjustment are not as a superscript. fluid, the difficulties of adjustment are per-plexing indeed. Often the stream rises in one state and flows through another. Those at the head might turn the current so that it would head might turn the current so that it would flow another way, and the very life of the commonwealth below would be cut off. So also there are international complications where streams flow across the border between the United States and British America.

Major J. W. Powell, chief of the United States geological bureau, treats the matter broadly in a Century article. The difficulties of the problem are strongly outlined. Then he proposes a solution. The following extracts give the principal features:

"It is proposed to present a plan for the solution of these problems, and others connected therewith, in an outline of institutions necessary for the arid lands. Some of these problems have been discussed in former articles, and it may be well to summarize them all once more, as follows:

First. The capital to redeem by irrigation 100,000,000 acres of land is to be obtained, and $1,000,000,000 is necessary.

First. The capital to redeem by irrigation 100,000,000 acres of land is to be obtained, and $1,000,000,000 is necessary.

Second. The lands are to be distributed to the people, and as yet whe have no proper system of land laws by which it can be done.

Third The waters must be divided among the states, and as yet there is no law for it, and the states are now in conflict.

Fourth. The waters are to be divided among the people, so that each man may have the amount necessary to fertilize his farm, each hamlet, town and city the amount necessary for domestic purposes, and that every thirsty garden may quaff from the crystal waters that come from the mountains.

Fifth. The great forests that clothe the hills, plateaus and mountains with verdure must be saved from devastation by fire and preserved for the use of man, that the sources of water may be protected, that farms may be fenced and homes-built, and that all this wealth of forest may be distributed among the people.

Sixth. The grasses that are to feed the flocks and herds must be protected and utilized.

Saventh. The great mineral deposits—the Seventh. The great mineral deposits—the fuel of the future, the iron for the railroads, and the gold and silver for our money—must be kept ready to the hand of industry and the Eighth. The powers of the factories of that great land are to be created and utilized, that the hum of busy machinery may echo among the mountains—the symphonic music of induction.

"A thousand millions of money must be used; who shall furnish it? Great and many industries are to be established; who shall control them? Millions of men are to labor; who shall employ them? This is a great nation, the government is powerful; shall it engage in this work? So dreamers may dreem, and so ambition may dictate, but in the name of the men who labor I demand that the laborers shall employ themselves; that the enterprise shall be controlled by the men who have the genius to organize, and whose homes are in the lands developed, and that the money shall be furnished by the people; and I say to the government: Hands off! Furnish the people with institutions of justice, and let them do the work for themselves. The solution to be propounded, then, is one of institutions to be organized for the establishment of justice, not of appropriations to be made and offices created by the government.

"In a group of mountains a small river has its source. A dozen or a score of creeks unite to form the trunk. The creeks higher up divide into brooks. All these streams combined form the drainage system of a hydrographic hasin, a unit of country well defined in nature.

to form the trunk. The creeks higher up divide into brooks. All these streams combined form the drainage system of a hydrographic basin, a unit of country well defined in nature, for it is bounded above and on each side by heights of land that rise as crests to part the waters. This hydraulic basin is segregated from hydraulic basin by nature herself, and the landmarks are practically perpetual. In such a basin of the arid region the irrigable lands lie below; not chiefly by the river's side, but on the messa and low plains that stretch back on each side. Above these lands the pasturage hills and mountains stand, and there the forests and sources of water supply are found. Such a district of country is a commonwealth by itself. The people who live therein are interdependent in all their industries. Every man is interested in the conservation and management of the water supply, for all the waters are needed within the district. The men who control the farming below must also control the upper regions where the waters are gathered from the heavens and stored in the reservoirs. Every farm and garden in the valley below is dependent upon each fountain above.

"All of the lands that lie within the basin above the farming districts are the catchment areas for all the waters poured upon the fields

"All of the lands that lie within the basin above the farming districts are the catchment areas for all the waters poured upon the fields below. The watere that control these works all constitute one system, are dependent one upon another, and are independent of all other systems. Not a spring or creek can be touched without affecting the interests of every man who cultivates the soil in the region. All the waters are common property until they reach the main canal, where they are to be distributed among the people. How these waters are to be caught and the common source of wealth utilized by the individual settlers interested therein is a problem for the men of the district to solve, and for them alone.

"But these same people are interested in the forests that crown the heighths of the hydrographic basin. If they permit the forests to be graphic basin. If they permit the forests to be destroyed, the source of their water supply is injured and the timber values are wiped out. If the forests are to be guarded, the people directly interested should perform the task. An army of aliens set to watch the forests would need excellent many of the second of the seco army of aliens set to watch the forests would need another army of aliens to watch them, and a forestry organization under the hands of the general government would become a hotbed of corruption; for it would be impossible to fix responsibility and difficult to secure integrity of administration, because ill-defined values in great quantities are involved.

"Then the pasturage is to be protected. The men who protect these lands for the water they supply to agriculture can best protect the grasses for the summer pasturage of the cattle and horses and sheep that are to be fed on their farms during the months of winter. Again, the men who create water powers by and horses and sheep that are to be led on their farms during the months of winter. Again, the men who create water powers by constructing dams and digging canals should be permitted to utilize these powers for themselves, or to use the income from these powers which they themselves create, for the purpose of constructing and maintaining the works necessary to their agriculture.

"Thus it is that there is a body of interdependent and unified interests and values, all collected in one hydrographic basin, and all segregated by well-defined boundary lines from the rest of the world. The people in such a district have common interests, common rights and common duties, and must necessarily work together for common purposes. Let such a people organize, under national and state laws, a great irrigation district, including an entire hydrographic basin, and let them make their own laws for the division of the waters, for the protection and use of the forests for the extreme of the constant of the con an entire hydrographic basin, and let them make their own laws for the division of the waters, for the protection and use of the forcests, for the protection of the pasturage on the hills, and for the use of the powers. This, then, is the proposition I make: That the entire arid region be organized into natural hydrographic districts, each one to be a commonwealth within itself for the purpose of controlling and using the great values which have been pointed out. There are some great rivers where the larger trunks would have to be divided into two or more districts, but the majority would be of the character described. Each such community should possess its own irrigation works; it would have to erect diverting dams, dig canals and construct reservoirs; and such works would have to e maintained from year to year. The plan is to establish local self-government by hydrographic basins." As the government owns this land it is to

As the government owns this land it is to hold it in trust for actual settlers and divide out the territory into homesteads, as then hydrographic basins are organized into districts under some form of local self-government.

Major Powell insists that the capital shall be raised, not by outsiders who will gobble up the lands, but by taxation of the hydrographic basin in which all property is to be benefited basin in which all property is to be ber by irrigation. He closes his instructive article with the eloquent paragraphs:

"The effort has been made to present a plan by which the agriculture of the arid lands may be held as a vast field of exploitation for in dividual farmers who cultivate the soil with their own hands; and at the same time, and by the same institutions, to open to capital a field for safe investment and remunerative return, and yet to secure to the toiling farmers the natural increment of profit which comes from the land with the progress of industrial civili-zation.

"The great enterprises of mining, manufac-turing, transporting, axchanging and financier-ing in which the business kings of America are engaged challenge admiration, and I re-joice at their prosperity, and am glad that bleasings thus shower upon the people; bu-the brilliancy of great industrial operation does not daze my vision. I love the cradismore than the bank counter. The cottage home is more beautiful to me than the palace. I believe that the school-house is primal, the university secondary; and I believe that the justice's court in the hamlet is the only permanent foundation for the supreme court at the capital. Such are the interests which I advocate Without occult powers of prophecy, the man of common sense sees a wonderful future for this land. Hard is the heart, dull is the mind and weak is the will of the man who does not strive to secure wise institutions for the developing world of America.

"The lofty peaks of the arid land are silvered with oternal rime; the slopes of the mountains and the great plateaus are covered with forest groves; the hills billow in beauty, the valleys are parks of delight, and the deep canons thrill with the music of laughing waters. Over them all a clear sky is spread, through which the light of heaven freely shines. Clouds rarely mask the skies, but come at times like hosts of winged beauty floating past, as they change from gray to gold, to crimson and to gorgeous purple. The soul must worship these glories, yet with the eld Scotch poet I can exclaim:

It's rare to see the morning bleeze, Itike a bonfire frac the sea;
It's fair to see the burnic kiss
The lip o' the flow'ry lea;
An' fine it is on green hiliside, where hums the bonnic bee, But rarer, fairer, finer far Is the Ingleside for me."

The Indian Who Lived 150 Years. The oldest man of the century, or rather two centuries, was doubtless Gabriel, the In-dian who lived 150 years.

Charles H. Shinn writes Frank Leslie's Weekly concerning this old Indian, who lived at the mission of Salinas, in Monterey county, California.

"Gabriel was a chief of the Escalenes tribe, and was on an expedition to the coast when Father Junipero landed in 1770. He was baptised by him, and helped to build the missions of Carnelo, San Antonio, and Soledad. There were no records kept among the Indians. The only means of deciding about Gabriel's age is from his own statements, corroborated by subsequent testimony. Gabriel says that when Carmelo misson was founded in 1770, he was a grandfather, which could not have made him less than thirty-two. His son, Zachariah, by his third wife, died at Gonzales, in 1883, aged 114, as nearly as can be ascertained. "Gabriel was a chief of the Escalenes tribe

His son, Zachariah, by his third wife, died at Gonzales, in 1883, aged 114, as nearly as can be ascertained.

"Father Sorrentin!, who first came to Monterey, in 1845, knew both Gabriel and his son as old men at that time. The church records contain a memorandum of Zachariah's baptism. Another old Indian, Jose Lauriano, who died in 1886, aged about 110 years, for whose name the mission baptismal record is now being searched by Father Sorrentini, was for many years with Dr. S. M. Archer, of the county hospital. He gave evidence that Gabriel was a grandfather and looked old when he was a little boy. They were of the same tribe, and spent much time together.

"Mrs. Munras, of Monterey, a Spanish lady, now nearing her hundredth İyear, told Father Sorrentini many years ago that when she was a little girl Gabriel was an old man, and went by the name of Old Gabriel. Mrs. Castro, a very old Spanish lady, who died seven years ago, added her testimony on this point. Both these ladies remembered occurrences of 1809 and 1810, and were very careful witnesses. A mass of similar affidavits from old settlers of Monterey county was taken ten years ago and sent to the vatican, with photographs of 'the oldest Copies of the affidavits were not kept here, but have been sent for. The Ploneer society proposes to gather up all the additional evidence that can be had on the subject. Mayor Hill, Dr. S. M. Archer, W. S. Johnson, cashier of the Salinas bank, who cared for Gabriel for many years, and other leading citizens of that region, agree in saying that the old man showed little change in the last forty years of his life. It is said that he had seven successive wives, to all of whom he was married by the rites of the church, and that he had a son named Bartolo by his last ne was married by the rites of the church, and that he had a son named Bartolo by his last wife when she was about a hundred years old. "Gabriel was a small man of about five feet six inches, and very agile in his youth. He was trained to be a mason and bricklayer at the Mission Sciedad, and at that fime, about 1820, was noted for his remarkable endurance, being able to 'walk down any horse.' At the time of his death he weighed only about 110 pounds The autopsy showed that the immediate cause of death was pneumonia. The arteries showed marked calcification. All the vital organs were much atropied. The lungs. arteries showed marked calcification. All the vital organs were much atrophied. The lungs, liver and spleen showed all the signs of advanced old age. Two remarkable features were the almost entire absence of blood in the body, and the absence of the expected ossification of the cartilages. The complete report has been published.

"I used to see Old Gabriel working in his garden near Natividad, and afterward at Santa Rita. As late as 1880 the old man used to walk three miles and back to the Catholic church every Sunday. He was known to every child in Salinas, and received many presents of candy and fruit. In his later years he never eat meat. His hearing and eyesight were good to the last. He never used tea, coffee, tobacco, or any form of liquor, but he drank a great deal of hot water. He had a heavy head of hair, still showing traces of black. Five teeth remained in the lower and one in the upper jaw."

THE SPECTATOR.

A great deal has been said about the time when nations will settle their differences by arbitration instead of war, but few people had any idea that steps would be taken in that di-

The actual demonstration is often far in advance of the public's idea, and this is a case in point. The rules adopted by the Pan-American congress were published but seemed to attract little notice, though one of them proposes to unite all of North and South America under a treaty of arbitration, whereby each nation will be bound to submit its differences with other American nations to arbitration. During the continunce of this treaty in force the right of conquest will not be recognized between American nations, and every dispute will be settled by an international tribunal of some kind, the decisions of which shall be binding and supported by the power of all the Ameri can nations.

This, if adopted by the nations represented, will be the broadest arbitration scheme ever inaugurated, and will be the boldest blow that has ever been struck at the war idea. In these days, when business and politics are developing the federation idea faster than ever before this long stride in the direction of internationa federation has hardly attracted the attention of

The queer ideas some people have of the southern portion of this country are not excusable in people of such general intelligence as those who hold them. It is difficult to conceive of such ignorance as this in the editors of one of our great magazines.

of one of our great magazines.

Is this untoward event (the acquittal of Dawson's slayer by a negro jury) to close the efforts of those who have carried the negro thus far on the road towards equal manhood? Are they to decide that their own race needs conversion first, and that the negro must, until then, be left to himself? To do so would be to forget that every taint of slavery in the status of the negro means the survival of militarism and the duello among the whites. How much this means is well worth the serious thought of those who are remaking the south. Are they to rely upon the natural wealth of their region, upon its iron and other metals, upon its cotton and cotton-seeds, and upon the coming in of men from other sections to claim a share of all this wealth? They will be relying upon a broken reed. Bankers, mill-owners, superintendents of factories and railways, do not work, if they can help it, in an environment which compels the use of the pistol-pocket. Northern manufacturers and business men, who realize the intensity of the competition which is some day to come upon them from the south, will do their work with less present apprehension so long as any lingering remnant of the duello shall wind its tentacles around southern business.

There is truth in the idea that brutality in the negro race or any other part of our population.

the negro race or any other part of our population will lead to riolent resistance of its our rageous acts. There are certain forms of crime that bring swift punishment upon their per strators anywhere, no matter what their color of condition. But to describe the south as "an ent ronment which compels the use of the pistol-poc." is to brand the author of such description as either an ignoramus about this region, or a maticious slanderer of a lawabiding people, whose character and civiliza-tion will compare favorably with the best on earth.

This, if no defeuse of dueling, which by the way is almost an obsolete custom in this country, but there is no need that the critics of the duello should misrepresent the condition of southern society in order to frame an argument. According to the position taken above, the business of France and Germany should be in a deplorable predicament, for if there is any part of the earth where the code duello is in force it is in those countries. Yet where is there outside of the south a more wonderful example of rehabitilation than in France. If the business men and manufacturers put faith in this defense from southern competition they

In the first place, the condition alleged is not here, and in the second, it would not prevent development if it were.

The daily life of the members of the association is an interesting one.

Once you enter the home of the association

a visitor, and see the attractions which surround its membership, you are more than apt to return again, and in the end have your name put on the register with the hundreds of others who grace the Young Men's Christian association roll.

Laying aside the religious features of the association, which are at all times most interesting and healthful, the association is a great fraternal social body. On these features much of its strength and popularity lies.

For the average Atlantian there is no more attractive place than the Y. M. C. A. Its membership reaches all the way up the scale from mechanic to capitalist. In the beautiful parlors, the reading-rooms, or the m, they all meet together in their daily attendance.

From 9 o'clock in the morning until 10 o'clock at night they come and go.

o'clock at night they come and go.

Mr. C. A. Licklider, the general secretary, or Mr. H. B. Mays, assistant secretary, are always on hand with a friendly greeting for all who stop in, whether member or visitor. Both are energetic workmen in the Young Men's Christian association cause, and possessing qualifications peculiarly suited to their work, they never

Everybody in At-Everybody in Atlanta knows how beautiful the home of the association is.

There is scarcely anybody who has

apartments or heard enthusiastic descriptions of them. Before the build-

Usually the forenoons are spent quietly in reading the daily papers by members who

Many business men stop to have a chat or read the paper every morning before they go down town. Then others drop in for a half hour or so going to and from dinner, though from tweive to two o'clock the rooms are less frequented than at any other time during the As the afternoon wears along the number of

Many come especially at certain times on certain days to get a first look at the magazines as they arrive.

The members are enthusiastic over their branch. Saturday afternoons the rooms are always well filled, and the tastily-furnished parlors make an enjoyable retreat for the tired railroader.

Altogether, the Young Men's Christian association in Atlanta, if it should suddenly cease to exist, would be missed more than any other religious or social organization.

Pay it a visit, talk with its members, and see if this is not about so.

BILL ARP TALKS.

I thought it was Sherman. No, I didn't, either, but somehow it reminded me of Sherman. We had company for dinner-children and grand-children and other kin folks, and were winding up the general repast with straw-berries and cream when suddenly there was a a clap of thunder that shook the elements and brought a storm of wind and rain and hail so swiftly that it stopped the feminine conversation. Mrs. Arp looked at me and I looked at her for a moment. There was a wild racket and a rattling overhead and against the windows, and in the back hall, like a thousand guns had opened fire upon our devoted household. The long back hall was open to the wind and the hail-stones rolled and bounced furiously through it and into the front hall and covered the floor. Most of them were like marbles, but many were as large as walnuts, and such a fall of hail has not been seen in these parts for years and years. The wind blew like a young cyclone, and it took all hands to close the windows and slam the doors. Mrs. Arp windows and slam the doors. Mrs. Arp looked out and exclaimed: "Oh the pit, the flower-pit. Just see the hail crashing through the glass." The horse and the cow were grazing in the front lot, and suddenly waked up to the situation, and set out on a run, and galloped round and round, but found no place of refuge. The peacock screamed, and made for the house, but his beautiful tail was in his way. He had too much rudder for his ship, and soon found himself away down in the grove. Too much tail is bad dressing for anything in a storm. Old Fido, our superannuated dog, gave an indignant bark, and slowly trotted to the piazza. The leaves and twigs from the forest trees in the lawn filled the air and traveled with the storm. The ground was white with hail, and it banked up against the house and fence several inches deep. I would like to be up in the clouds and see how that thing is done. The children screamed with delight and wonder, for they had never seen anything like it before, but it was no delight to me, for I knew that it carried destruction in in its pathway. I thought of the farmers' cotton that had just made a narrow escape from the frost. I thought of my garden and green-house, and all the pretty flowers and plants that I had toiled so faithfully over to please Mrs. Arp. I could see them bend and shrink before the icy blast that stripped them of their leaves and flowers. More work; more work for me, I ruminated. And sure enough my beautiful squash vines that were just beginning to bloom are torn all to pieces, and so are my butter-beans that were just reaching their young tendrils to the poles. looked out and exclaimed: "Oh the pit, the

I said I thought of Sherman—I always think of him in May when the strawberries come. Just twenty-six years ago we had a strawberry feast one night at our house—strawberry and cream for supper and a little later on old Sherman began to scatter his unfeeling shells right over the house, and we all waked up to the heart of the stration and found that four eral Johnston had ordered another fall back, and that Rome was being abandoned to her fate. I had partaken too much of strawberries and cream and they were holding a secession meeting within my corporate limits, but all suffering and bent up as I was we had to get up and depart those coasts prematurely, in the darkness of a foggy night, and meander away to parts unknown with vigilance and alacrity. All night long we hustled from the foul jinvader and left our beautiful home to his mercy and our strawberries and cow to his appetite. And that's why I thought of Sherman when the hail-storm broke up our feast.

But it is all right. I can plant more beans

A little group of members of the senate and house sat in the senate restaurant one day this week, says a Washington correspondent of the New York Tribune, when Senator Morrill came in to get his daily allowance of bread and milk.

"There," said a member from a western state, "is an evidence of what careful attention to hygiene, and particularly an avoidance of the intemperate use of wine and tobacco will do for a man. There is Senator Morrill, who has just celebrated his eightieth birthday, and I don't believe he ever touched liquor or tobacco in his life."

tobacco in his life."

"Oh, that proves nothing," said another member of the group. "Men die every day at an extremely unripe and early age, who possess all of the virtues, while the most intemperate live to a good old age."

"Which reminds me," said a member from New England, "of the conversation which occurred between two witnesses and an old justice of the peace in the interior of my state a good many years ago. Old Justice Smith was extremely loquacious and he loved nothing better than the opportunity to point a moral in the process of conducting his judicial affairs. One day—I have forgotten what was the character of the case under consideration—a man named Wood was called to the witness stand. the witness stand.

""What is your age?" asked the judge.
"Eighty-three, was the reply.
"Eighty-three, eh?" said the judge. "That's a fine age. Do you ever use tobacco?"

"The judge rubbed his hands together. 'Or liquor?' he continued.
"'I don't know the taste of liquor, sir,' said the witness."

"The judge beamed. When the brief examination of the witness had been concluded he turned to the jury and said: 'Gentlemen, he turned to the jury and said: 'Gentlemen, it seems to be an opportune time to call your attention to the remarkable proof which we find in the example of this very intelligent witness of the virtue of abstinence. This old gentleman, still hale and hearty, has reached his eighty-third year. And to what are we to attribute his lengthened life, and, above all, his remarkable health? Why, to his abstinence from the use of stimulants. This is an example which we should all take to heart. Mr. Sheriff, call the next witness.'

"A long, lank, but robust-looking man with a snow-white beard responded to the name of Wood, and took the stand at the sheriff's summons. He proved to be the former witness's brother. 'And what is your age?' said the judge, pleasantly.

"'Ninety-one, sir,' was the reply.

"'Indeed!' said the judge, beaming again with all the effulgence of a full moon. 'This is interesting. Tell me, sir, have you ever known the taste of liquor or tobacco?'

"'Known the taste?' said the second witness. 'I guess I have. All I've got to kick about now is the fact that I can't taste it any more. It goes down like water. Judge,' in a confidential tone, 'I'm ninety-one years old an' I don't believe I've gone to bed sober since I was twenty-one.'

an' I don't believe I've gone to bed sober since I was twenty-one.'

"A titter went round the court-room—a very audible titter. The court looked up and surveyed the jury, the counsel, and the spectators in turn. 'Well, gentlemen,' he said. 'this doesn't exactly gee with what I was just saying about abstinence. But it seems to me it proves one thing—that it doesn't make very much difference whether their Wood is wet or dry in this country.' dry in this country."

Mercury and Calomel.

Injudicious use of mercury in the form of calomel or otherwise leaves very injurious after-effects. Much of the distress that afflicts humanity is due to a too persistent use of this poison. The various functions of the body become impaired by its use, and even the bones sometimes become affected, causing aches and a general feeling of debility and distress. Anyone who has used calomel or mercury in any of its forms, will do well to follow it up with a use of Dr. Bull's Sarsaparilla. This excellent alterative counteracts the evil effects of mercury and other mineral poisons. It is composed of strictly vegetable ingredients, and there is nothing in its composition that will harm the most delicate. Good health invariably follows its use.—Springfield Health Journal.

WHY INGERSOLL WASN'T GOVERNOR. A Witty Lady's Answer to a Young Man's Pert Question.

New York Saturday Gazette. "Bob" Ingersoll, as everybody calls him, though I fail to see why even he isn't entitled to the full name and title of a civilized man, is growing old rapidly. I do not know what his real age is, but it is easy to see by his looks that he is well into the declining years of his life. "His eye is not dim, nor his natural force abated," but the lines of age are in his plump face, and his hair is growing scant and white. So long as he lives, however, he will undoubtedly continue to play the parts, both of the flint and of the steel, in the striking out of sparkling witticisms, for he seems to be as apt in provoking the wit of others, as he is in the exercises of his own.

Some little time ago, one of his too enthusiastic friends proposed him for membership in one of the smaller clubs without consulting him beforehand, and when he was balloted for, he was overwhelmingly blackballed. One of his friends met him the next day and a sked him about it, very much to Ingersoll's surprise. "Why," he said, "I did not know that I had been proposed In fact I don't remember to have ever heard of the club before, though it's very probable that I have." Then after a short pause he continued in a sort of plaintive, grieved way: "I do think they might have told me beforehand, so that I could move out of town."

His friends far outnumber his enemies, for those who condemn his teachings do not dislike the man so much as they abhor his doctrine. One of these, a bright, cultured society woman, who is moreover a devout Christian, was talking one day with one of his admirers, and took no pains to conceal her contempt for a man who would make such use of his talents as Ingersoll does. Her interlocutor was a clever enough man, but young enough to be enthusiastic in skepticism—a sure sign of youth. Some Features of the Passepied de

"Ingersoll has begun the actual destruction of the Christian church," he declared, after he had become somewhat nettled by her calm

The youth almost forgot his manners. With a poorly disguised sneer, he asked: "Well, can you tell me of one single important service to mankind that Christianity has ever rendered?"

The lady's eye twinkled. She pretended to reflect for a moment—just long enough for the young man to realize that he had laid a trap for himself. Then she answered deliberately: "Yes, I can recall one thing Christianity did, which was an incalculable benefit to mankind."

"What was that?" asked the young man,

What was that?" asked the young man, "it prevented Colonel Ingersoll from being made governor of Illinois."

THE GENERAL'S THEATER

Many of the older citizens of Atlanta remember the Athenæum theater which stood on Decatur street, opposite the Kimball house, But very few of these old-timers, and none of the present generation, know that this theater was in full blast during Sherman's occupation of the city. This bit of ancient history is recalled by a recent article in the Brockton, Massachusetts, Gazette, written by an ex-federal soldier. It seems that the Gazette correspondent be-longed to one of Sherman's military bands. One evening after the capture of Atlanta the band was serenading the general, when he came out, and entered into conversation with Mr. Smith, the leader.

"Smith," said the general, "I am using for my headquarters a house that belongs to Mrs. Welsh. She is destitute, and is the widow of the late Masonic grand-master of Georgia. Now, as a personal favor to me, I want you and the band to give her a benefit in the Athenæum. You had better find out the condition of the theater, and if you need any help call on me."

The leader of the band went the next day to look at the theater, and found it minus the curtain and the act drop for the stage, and with no means of lighting it, as the confederates had blown up the gas works when they evacuated the city. When Sherman heard the condition of affairs he issued a requisition for twenty pounds of candles to light the hall. The members of the band went to work, and produced a substitute for a stage curtain by running two front-scene shades together in the center. Next came the programme. Mrs. Welsh had several children, who were well up in simple songs, and after a few rehearsals a programme was arranged with several pieces by the band, a string orchestra, a piano solo by Mrs. Welsh, songs by the children, and a fancy drum solo by the leader. A dozen soldiers were detailed to act as ushers and police, and the fact that the concert was known to be under the patronage of with an audience, paying one dollar a nacked for parquette seats and seventy-five cents for the gallery.

The boys in blue were in a pleasant mood, and applauded everything enthusiastically.

The sum of $200 was turned over to Mrs. Welsh, and the concerts were repeated every night until the audiences began to dwindle. There were so many bands in the army that music was literally in the air. A conference with Mrs. Welsh and her juveniles led to a change. A pantomime was placed on the stage with brilliant success. The professional actors in the army came to the front, and in a short time the Athenæum was booming with song and dance men, contortionists, rope-walkers, negro minstrels and freaks. There was something new every night, and the money rolled in.

The union veteran who tells this story has, perhaps, forgotten some of the points in the course of a quarter of a century.

The residence used by General Sherman for headquarters did not belong to Mrs. Welsh—it was at that time the property of Judge R. F. Lyon, but Mrs. Welsh was occupying it—the house is our present high-school building. Mrs. Welsh was a widow, with one or two children of her own, and the three children of her dead sister, whose husband had been a her dead sister, whose husband had been a high Masonic official.

The distress of this little family deeply touched General Sherman who, despite his stern and ruthless temper in the field, was kind-hearted enough at times. In the heart of the enemy's country, and busy with his preparations for his march to the sea, talls touch old warrior was man about to turn tough old warrior was man enough to turn aside from his work of butchery and burning to interest himself in the welfare of these ielples victims of war. The general's theater saved its beneficiaries from absolute rain, and perhaps starvation, but there is more to tell. Colonel LeDuc, one of Sherman's officers, was a Mason. He came to the aid of Mrs. Welsh, and sent the children to a Masonic school in Ohio, and made satisfactory arrangements to give them a good start in life.

In these days of lurid war reminiscences it is pleasant to turn aside from the darker features of the struggle, and place on record an occasional incident showing the brighter and better side of human nature.

Sherman has never directed any theatrical enterprise since he left Atlanta, but he is still fond of the stage, and it is said that he is a fre-quent and welcome visitor behind the scenes. He could run a theater again if he felt like it. WALLACE P. REED.

the wife's love of drink. For twenty-seven years the woman has visited her husband's house, helping his sister at times to cook his meals, make his bed and iron his clothes. On Wednesday noon the husband came home from his work and found a woman lying in a drunken stupor, as he thought, at the foot of his stairs. He stepped over the body and went upstairs to his dinner. It was his vagrant wife and she was dead.

The man, Timothy Stack, is an Irishman by birth, and lives with his sister Bridget in rooms in an alley leading from No. 48 Cherry street. He has the appearance of being a most worthy and steady man, but his heart is very "Do you see that iron stove," he said yesterday; "how hard it is? My heart has been like that against my wife for nearly thirty years. I told her then, in 1863, that she must turn from drink or I should take our boy and leave her. She signed the pledge with me that morning and at night I found her drunk. I took the boy that night and left her. My boy is married now and has a family of his own, but we have stayed neither night nor day together since. She has come here all the time, but when she came in I went out, and when she went out I came in."

As the stern-faced, white-haired old man told his story, his sister sat by and oried, as old women cry, silently and with but tew tears. "Nay, nay," she would say as the husband told his story. "The poor girl is dead and I loved her. Say no ill of her, but pray instead for her peace. I would gladly have buried her, would I, but the policeman would not bring her up to me. Even now I would pay for her burial, but they would not let me bury her in consecrated ground."

The most generally useful medicine is Ayer's Pills. As a remedy for the various diseases of the stomach, liver, and bowels, these Pills have no equal. Their sugar-coating causes them not only to be easy and pleasant to take, but preserves their medicinal integrity in all climates and for any reasonable length of time. The best family medicine, Ayer's Pills are, also, unsurpassed for the use of travelers, soldiers, sallors, campers, and ploneers. In some of the most critical cases, when all other remedies have failed,

"In the summer of 1864 I was sent to the Annapolis hospital, suffering with chronic diarrhéa. While there, I became so reduced in strength that I could not speak and was compelled to write everything I wanted to say. I was then having some 25 or 30 stools per day. The doctors ordered a medicine that I was satisfied would be of no benefit to me. I did not take it, but persuaded my nurse to get me some of Dr. Ayer's Pills. About two o'clock in the afternoon I took six of these pills, and by midnight began to feel better. In the morning the doctors came again, and after deciding that my symptoms were more favorable, gave that my symptoms were more favorable, gave me a different medicine, which I did not use, but took four more of the pills instead. The next day the doctors came to see me, and thought I was doing nicely, (and so did I). I then took one pill a day for a week. At the and that time, I considered myself cured and that Ayer's Pills had saved my life. I was then weak, but had no return of the disease, and gained in strength as fast as could be expected,"—F. C. THE MYSTERIOUS

BY F. L. STANTON.

"There is a man," said my friend, pointing to a short, thick-set, dark-whiskered personage who was leaning against the hotel counter, reading an evening newspaper, "there is a man who, I'll wager, has a history. I have not seen the fellow more than a dozen times, and really know nothing for or against him; but he has impressed me strangely; in fact, I am inclined to think that he is a bad man. Just observe his countenance.'

As I raised my eyes to scan his features the stranger also raised his from the newspaper and gave me glance for glance. Indeed, so intensely did he gaze, first at me and then a my friend, that we were both convinced he had overheard the conversation which had dimy attention to him. He had succeeded in outstaring me, but the impression received of the man in that one glance agreed exactly with the estimate in which he was

But that very night, as I sat in a com-pany of ladies at my boarding house, near an window, I was alarmed when one of open window, I was an income turning them uttered a piercing scream, and turning without to the window, I saw a man standing without and gazing within with glittering eyes.

A UNIQUE DISTINCTION CLAIMED

A True and Complete Story of the Only Con-federate Commissary Captured at the Front.

General E. Kirby Smith has many acknowledged claims to distinction as a soldier and as a citizen. But there is one unique distinction that few people ever heard claimed for him.

It is this: That he is the oldest living man

The statement was made here yesterday by "You mean there isn't a man in Florida older than General Smith?" "Not one that was born there."

"Oh, that's an acknowledged fact down there. There was some discussion about it a year or two ago, and they tried to find a Floridian older than the general. They couldn't do it.

"He was born in St. Augustine, the oldest city in America, and is the oldest living man

Most old soldiers will remember that very few quartermaster or commissaries were killed or captured during the war, and the that were captured were taken from the ex-

But there is one instance on record where a quartermaster was captured at the front, and with his face to the fce.

Mr. W. C. Henderson, telegraph editor of The Constitution, tells the story. On one occasion the two lines were facing one another, with only a short distance sepa

A farmer rode into the confederate camp on a mule. Most of the soldiers had been farmers and were good judges of horse-flesh, so that in conversation with the old farmer the merits and demerits of the mule came up naturally for some dis It was a good mule, they agreed with the farmer-"but," added the owner, "I've never seen another man that could ride him." This remark brought on another discussion. Several of the soldiers protested that they had never been thrown from a mule, and were willing to bet that they could ride this one. One of the most vociferous in praising his own horsemanship was a commissary. He swore he could ride that mule, and finally it was decided to let him try.

He had no sconer mounted than the mule began plunging viciously, and then he ran around in a circle several times at breakneck speed, the commissary

Suddenly that mule made a break for the front. The commissary sawed and shouted in vain. Every attempt was made to stop them, but the mule was wild and the commissary knew that if he once let loose he would have

That was the last seen of them, nor has one word ever been heard, from that day to this, of the commissary or the mule.

A wealthy old planter near Vicksburg made a specialty of raising bees. He had a number of hives, and his honey was famous in the

But when the soldiers came down the river and finally camped near his place, the hives and the honey disappeared. Marauding parties went daily and nightly, but always came back empty-handed. Peaceful persuasion was equally without result.

They offered him fabulous sums for a pound of honey, and gilt-edge orders for gold on the confederate government, but all in vain. "I tell you, gentlemen," was the invariable reply, "I have no honey." The slaves knew perhaps, but were afraid to tell anything.

One night a lieutenant in full-dress uniform, accompanied by a squad of six soldiers, came to the old man's house and knocked at the

The story from now on is a tale of woe. The pretended officer and the remaining soldier went back to camp for reinforcements and returned to the swamp. The hives were carried off, two men to a hive, and not one was

General Gist never could find the autograph letter addressed to him, though vigorous in-quiry was instituted, nor did he ever receive

MISS LOUISE WORCES : STARTS ON A JOURNEY AROUND THE " - PLD

From the Pittsburg Dispatch.

Miss Louise Worcester, the devoted friend of Wilkes Booth, the assassin of Lincoln, an interview with whom was published in the Dispatch a short time since, has started on a trip around the world in the hope of meeting the exile. Miss Worcester is in receipt of many amusing letters containing offers of a very varied character.

BIRMINGHAM, Ala., May 14.—Miss Louise Worcester, who believes that John Wilkes Booth still lives, left last night for Paris. She will sail from New York in two weeks, and after spending the summer with a sister in Paris will go to Alexandria, Egypt, then to Palestine, Jerusalem, and on around the world, returning to the United States in eight or ten returning to the United States in eight or ten months.

Several weeks ago the Dispatch published a history of this remarkable woman and her reasons for believing that Wilkes Booth was not killed in Garrett's barn, as history would have the world believe. It was mentioned that she spent most of her time traveling over the world in the hope of meeting Booth in his exile. This explains, in a measure, her trip to Paris and around the world. In Paris she visits a sister from whom she has been separated many years, but the remainder of her journey is not made for pleasure.

Since the publication in the Dispatch of the first correct history of Misk Worcester and her story of Wilkes Booth your correspondent has gained some additional information. This information accounts for her visit to Egypt.

MAY EE THE WHITE PASHA.

MAY BE THE WHITE PASHA.

Several years ago she was speaking to a friend one day about Booth and teiling her reasons for believing that he was not dead.

"If he is living, where do you suppose he is hiding?" asked her friend.

"I do not know," she answered, after a moment's pause, "but he may be somewhere in Egypt or Africa. A fortune teller, or astrologist, told me once that Booth was in Alexandria, Egypt, but of course I place no reliance in that."

When the newspapers of Europe and America were printing columns of news and conjecture about the mysterious "white pasha" in Africa, Miss Worcester one day remarked to this same friend, "I believe that mysterious white pasha' is Wilkes Booth. His love of white pasha' is Wilkes Booth. His love of adventure and daring spirit would naturally lead him on some such wild expedition if he was anywhere in that part of the world."

From these statements it is a reasonable conclusion that she goes to Egypt and Africa with a vague idea that while journeying through those distant lands she may somewhere meet the "white pasha" and find that he is really the man she dreams is still alive.

Many amusing incidents have resulted from the publication of Miss Worcester's story, and she declares that one of her reasons for going abroad is to escape the notoriety it gave her She has received hundreds of letters from cranks all over the United States, some of them very amusing. One man in Califmrnia wanted to marry her. He said he was 60 years old, owned a valuable stock farm, had several thousand dollars in bank, and, if Miss Worcester would consent to marry him, he would SOME NOVEL SUGGESTIONS.

A preacher in Texas wanted her to build a mission church and call it "the Booth Chapel." He wrote that she could not dispose of her fortune to better advantage and could at the same time henor the memory of the man she loved. A New York fortune teller wrote that he knew Booth was alive, he had read it in the stars, and he was trying by the aid of the stars to learn where he was hiding. Once he had almost succeeded, but one of the stars in his combination] went wrong and he lost his trail. He was still at work, however, and would yet locate the missing assassin.

THE BUILDING OF THE BOD

Miss Lindley Tells Some Interesting Facts

The most popular one is physical culture, and this has reached us at a favorable time. Our houses are packed to bursting with isms; the school-girl's back is curved carrying the printed lore she is comprehending; and still she knows not one whit about the curved back, nor the neglect and injury it is suffering. The college gymnasium has been to her like a luxury for another people, and she has not realized that such blessings were waiting for her sex.

It has not occurred to the average girl that she is not built right; that her chest is sunken, her shoulders and hips prominent and uneven, her head forward, and probably her spine irregular, nor that her many phases come from an unequal growth. Some mothers even re-ent this knowledge as an unkindness or an interference. But the science has advanced to the knowledge of every well-read family now. It needs no argument as it did five years back when our college physicians gave fewer statistics, and even the objection of danger has ceased to be raised, since the guarded danger of a properly conducted gym-nasium has produced fewer accidents than any other pleasure or walk in life-and now our cities are reaching out for conductors of gymnasiums. "Teachers of health culture", they visely request, showing that they are followers of Apollos and not Hercules-that | health not

ONE OF THE FIRST PRINCIPLES.

The Atlanta school for physical culture, the in the south was established in September, '88, at the request of Mr. Grady, Mrs. Alexander and Westmoreland. Other schools have had great success at Pittsburg, Chattanooga and Savannah, having grown out of this school, and others are about to be established in Rome and Athens. The amount of good the Atlanta school has done is marvelous. It was not fully realized by our last year's members until they were scattered among various summer resorts and found they were possessed of endurance and health they had never dreamed of before. Matrons could walk with no back-aches, and our young girls could climb and dance experiencing no fatigue. They all found less use for the fan than when their blood circulated less freely, and sleeplessness and nervousness were unheard of.

The change in their figures and the texture of flesh was a matter of pride to them also, and they did not forget that science has given rise

BENDING TO THE FLOOP physical Ladies apt to think any exercise is physical culture. This is an errroneous idea, one that causes much suffering if carried into excess, as long walks, continued exercises, tennis, etc. Any one of our authorities can easily exwith economy to all the muscles and organs, and at the close of exercise hour, should show uniform fatigue and also hunger. There has never been an accident of any kind in the gymnasium and but few bruises, neither over-exercise in the gymnasium. There have been cases where ladies have over-fatigued themselves after class hours by shopping, etc., which is not the fault, whatever, of physical

Last year we graduated three teachers of the profession, they having devoed their entire time from September to January to their studies as they would have done at any other college work. This year we have eight, and their work has been carried on with enthusiasm and vigor. They are not all of robust physique. ladies are months in getting beyond this and the work with light pulley weights.

The value of such exercise should never be lost sight of in the interest of apparatus work, for it is of great advantage in rendering flexible the muscles, but should precede heavier work just as surely the walk should precede the more rapid gaits of a horse. We give in illustrations a few of the leg exercises, the chest expanding and elevating, the balancing, and

Apparatus work is as necessary after the muscles are ready for it as hearty foods to the healthy digestion-but progression must be carefully observed.

A noted New York teacher told of the needs of exercise when he said:

"It is singular, but it makes no difference how well a young lady may have her hands and fingers under control. She may be an unusually brilliant performer upon the piano, or she may be a remarkably graceful dancer and have her legs and feet under perfect control, but when she tries these exercises, and particularly when she combines any of these movements, such as moving her right arm in one direction, her left arm in another and at the same time moving one of her legs, she makes a lamentable failure at first. Systematic physical development also develops the brain and will power. It gives the will control over the nerves that communicate orders from the brain to the various muscles. Our system develops the body and character as well." As has been said by a distinguished English writer: "It is singular, but it makes no difference

> The exercises will doubtless require no explanation. They are, perhaps, the simplest of all, yet none are more beneficial. The chest-weights-pulleys with graduated weights-are always most valuable. The trapeze and bar for "chinning" came in a little later, for the tendency with the beginner is to attempt \too much in this way. To chin one's self, as the photograph given herewith shows, is to lift one's weight by one's hands from the floor so that the chin will touch the tips of the fingers. It is an exrecise that requires more skill than strength, although the lat-T THE CHIN-ING MACHINE considerable extent.

Of the mecha nical appliances for advanced pupils, there are many. The horizontal bar and the trapeze are always great favorites. One of the most useful, in my judgment, is the quarter circle—especially good for chest and lungs.

I am writing no essay on physical culture, just a sketch of some of the methods used by our classes. While always advising exercises, I am strongly of the opinion that one hour a day is enough; with that, wonders can be accomplished. E. MARGUERITE LINDLEY.

The Sale at Greenwood. The Sale at Greenwood.

The W. M. Scott & Co's. sale at Greenwood, was a success. Over fifty lots were sold at an average of over $100. This property was bought a little over a year ago for $120 per acre. One-half of a land lot, the sale of yesterday, was about three-fourths of a mile across from the property of the Belt railroad, and shows that property in that location is constantly, increasing. Mr. Scott always carries a crowd of buyers with him.

A LOVER OF THE HORSE

A MAN WHO HAS HANDLED SOME FAMOUS FLYERS.

He Bears Something of a Resemblance to a Bill Nye Etching, and Is In His Way a Character.

At a glance the features outlined in the cut below are remindful somewhat of Bill Nye in his famous scratch plate humorisms.
"Mac"—T. M. McFerran—is a character.
He knows as much about horses as Darwin is accredited with having learned about

While he has been an Atlanta man less than a year, Mr. McFerran is already a recognized local authority on all that per-tains to horsedom. And, by the way, Atlanta is putting a lot of money in fine horses lately. The standard has been raised rapidly in the past two or three years, and it is only a matter of time when Atlanta will be as noted for her thoroughbreds and standard breds as she is for everything else in the way of grit and enterprise.

But to the character again. Mr. McFerran, "Mac" I'll call him for short—then it suits him better, the jolly, whole-souled, generous fellow that he is landed in Atlanta to die, as he puts it himself, a month or two before the last exposition. His life of exposure, a great portion of it spent following the fortunes of noted turf-flyers, had brought his health to a point where he says death was on the back stretch, just turning the quarter pole at a winning

He came here from his blue-grass home nea Danville, Ky.

In that part of the country "Mac" is as well known as the record of Maud S. herself. All the famous stock farms there are old stamping grounds of his, and the way he describes them and the wonderful horses that are there, is enough to make the sorriest horseman half wild with enthusiasm. He has pulled the line over a multitude of record-breakers in his following of the circuit. One afternoon last week I rode with "Mac" out to the Piedmont grounds behind one of the thoroughbreds he swears by Lady Hamilton a beautiful dappled bay, who can throw dust in the eyes of almost any other flyer in town. It is his daily drive to Piedmont park, where he has a stable of racers in training, and in these trips he has become a familiar figure on

Peachtree. Personally, he would attract more than pass ing notice; his Nye-like expression of face has an attractiveness about it that cannot be The picture does not do him justice. 'Mac' tells many interesting stories of turf scenes and strifes, of the fascination and hardships of life on the course. He began his career among the thoroughbreds upon the famous farm of James C. Mc-Ferran, his uncle, who in his time was known the country over as the breeder of some of the finest horses that ever trod the turf, whose administrators realized something like a half million dollars from thoroughbred colts alone. The love of horses was born in "Mac" Naturally I asked him how he came to embark in such a life. His father was a Methodist preacher, but like all Kentuckians had his fine horses. But he lived up to his faith and horse-racing was one of the forbidden themes on the old home place.

When a school-boy, "Mac" tells how he used to slip the old gentleman's best horses out and run races with his neighbor chums. He was General Beaufort's right-hand man for a long time, and when you touch him on this his favorite stories are of the great Ten Broeck and the wonderful McWhorter, of the world's record of the one which stands to-day and of the tragic death of the other in his and of the tragic death of the other in his mighty effort to defeat it.

"Mac" was handling McWhorter when his record was so close to the world record of Ten Broeck. He was bringing him down little by little, and says in time the tables would have been turned between the two if good judgment had been used. But McWhorter was put against Ten Broeck when out of condition. He made a magnificent fight of it. At the quarter pole, with the race almost won, he broke both front legs, and had to be shot.

But this was "Mac" in Kentucky.

"Mac" in Atlanta is interesting.

Out at Piedment park he has horses that are already well known to lovers of thoroughbreds.

Some of them are more than likely to be heard from one of these days in the ways of the ways of the seard from one of these days in the ways of Everybody remembers "Bostick," the sorrel horse that made his bow at the last Piedmont exposition. He could show a lively gait then, as the stakes he won will show. But since last fall "Bostick" has brought his record away down, and can now show a mile in first-class form.

down, and can now show a mile in first-class form.

Then there is "Merrimack," as fieet a stallion as you would care to see, and "Bushtail," a Georgia horse that is getting into shape that is certain to surprise somebody.

"Beywood"—and he is the perfection of symmetry and speed—is another of the thoroughbreds of the stable; and "Lady Hamilton"—"Mac" puts her up as the finest all-round animal in the city.

But all these are nothing as compared to "Christine." She is "Mac's" pride and delight. He raised her from a colt, and no man's check for twenty thousand good dollars could buy her, he says.

"Mac" says he can make her show a mile in 2:16, and if she lives another year he expects her to cover it in considerably less time than that. Mr. McFerrain is bound up in his horses, as careful and devoted to them as a mother. He has quit the circuit, he says, and is so indebted to Atlanta for the restoration of his health that he will settle down and make this his home.

Law and medicine are the only professions which occur to most men. "Chemistry as a profession—I had never thought of that," would be the remark probably from a young man seeking employment.

In order to show the opening in this field, your correspondent obtained an interview with Dr. William L. Dudley. There is not a more eminent chemist in the south than Dr. Dudley. Besides occupying the chair of chemistry at Vanderbilt, he is state chemist of Ten nessee, and vice-president of the American Association for the Advancement of Science. "Chemistry as a profession," began the doctor, "may be prosecuted in several lines. A professional chemist may be a teacher of chemistry simply; he may be what is some-times called an analyst; or, again, he may be purely a scientist. The work of the teacher is well known. He, however, in addition to his teaching, may prosecute analytical work for commercial purposes, and again he may spend his spare time in the role of a scientist, that is, devoting himself to original investigation, endeavoring thereby the more thoroughly to understand the laws of nature and contributing his discoveries to the knowledge of the world, thus benefiting humanity at large. This is the noblest and highest work he can do.

'The analyst, or analytical chemist, is the man who devotes his whole time to commercial work. He has an office and laboratory in a city or commercial center, where he is prepared to do any kind of analysis brought to him. He determines the composition of ores, waters, fuels, and so forth, as his customers may desire. He holds himself in readiness to give his opinion on scientific processes for the benefit of manufacturers, and is ready to testify as an expert in all legal controversies. The profession of chemistry is thus often made very lucrative, as many manufacturers require the services of a chemist from time to time, and yet not often enough to justify them in em-ploying one regularly."
"Are there any analytical chemists in any of our southern cities?"

"One in Charleston," he continued, "several in Birmingham, but I know of none else-where. This, however, does not show that there is not enough chemistry work in any of our southern cities to employ a number of analysts. The railroad companies of Atlanta alone would take all of such a chemist's time, or rather they should do it. The Pennsylva-nia railroad has such a man with one-half dozen assistants. These chemists are required to test the steel rails, boilers, every particle of coal, water, paint-in fact, everything used by

"The importance of this is evident. Suppose the company wishes to purchase coal. If ash is present, the coal is comparatively useless
If sulphur is an ingredient, it is injurious to the flues. The chemist must detect these impurities if they are present. Thousands of ollars are thus saved every year. This plan has been tried by the Pennsylvania road for ten or twelve years, and they find it indispensa-ble, though they pay, as I have understood, from twelve to thirteen thousand dollars per annum for this bureau of inspection, as it is called. It is but a matter of a few years when every railroad will employ a chemist.

"You think, then, there will be plenty of openings in this field?"

'There are already hundreds of openings, and there is no doubt but that the openings will multiply much faster than the number of Why, students here in the university are always engaged before they finish their course, usually as much as six months shead of time." "And there is no trouble for a young chemist spondent.

"None whatever. He will, however, at first, in the majority of instances, have to accept a position at a very low salary for a few months, but if he proves himself com-petent and industrious this will will petent continue but a few months, when the salary will be doubled or increased still more. He is "But it is in the blast furnace where the chemist is especially useful. In order to be run economically, every blast furnace needs a chemist. I mean by that, every plant. There may be three furnaces at a plant. However, every furnace company does not employ a chemist, because some managers, unfortu nately for themselves, think they can do as well without them. This is, I am glad to say, rapidly becoming an exploded idea. Almost, without exception, the northern com-panies employ one or more chemists while few southern companies do. This is rapidly changing, however, and the services of chemists are being recognized and appreciated in the south as well as north. Soon every southern company will have its coterie of chemical advisers. All large steel and iron companies find their services indispensable. As for example: The Edgar Thompson Iron and Steel works, owned almost exclusively by Mr. Carnegie, employs one chief chemist, one first assistant and five or six additional chem ists, who work in turn night and day-so that every run of iron and steel is analyzed during the various stages of its production, and after It is finished into rails.'

"About what would be the salary of the head chemist of such a company as the one just mentioned?"

"Eighteen hundred dollars a year, if I remem ber correctly, is the salary given the head chemist by the Edgar Thompson company. But this is not the chief consideration. It lies in the fact that he has opportunities on account of his scientific knowledge of becoming more than a mere chemist. The positions of chemists are usually held by younger men, who, from their association with the practical workings of the furnaces and by their superi-or knowledge, step up to positions of superintendency and general management, thus commanding salaries only limited by their services. Salaries of ten and twelve thousand a year are not infrequent. In fact I knew man whose salary was twenty-five usand. Almost without exception these men start as chemists—in fact, no man can hold such a position as general manager or superintendent of one of these iron and steel works without a thorough knowledge of chemistry. Of course this demand for the chemist is not confined to the iron business, but he is essential in all pursuits where metals

"Do you know of any southern young men "Do you know of any southern young men occupying such positions as those mentioned?"

"No, I do not. The reason of this, I think, is largely due to the fact that until recently northern collects alone have been able to prepare men properly for such positions. Besides, the south has been slow to awake to the great possibilities in this line of work. You may feel NASHVILLE, Tenn., May 17.—[Special to The Constitution.]—What shall I do? This is the first question that comes to a young man as soon as he begins to think. The south is developing more sistant, both in the university and as state chemist, he has shown marked ability. I refer, of course, to Mr. Holinshead, of Fort Valley. "What facilities can you offer at Vander

"We have every facility that can be furnished by any university in the country. In addition to those in the chemical laboratory are those of the engineering department, which is fully equipped with two large special buildings where the student can prose-cute studies and practical work in mining, mechanical and civil engineering. Mining and mechanical engineering are especially im-portant in iron and steel manufacture, and chemistry plays an important part in both these professions."

"How much time will it take for a young man to fit himself for the particular work of iron and steel when he has finished the course say at the boys' high school in Atlanta?"

"Well, a bright and industrious man ought to prepare himself for such special work in two years. It is advisable for him, of course, to take more time, as he should prosecute at the same time other studies which would be of importance in such work. It is much to his in preparing himself, taking the full mining engineering course."

"How do you think the opportunities here presented compare with those of law and nedicine?"

"I feel certain the opportunities for advancement are much greater in chemistry and mining engineering than in either law or medicine, and particular-ly so in the south. One reason for this is the development of the south will be almost wholly in the line of iron and steel production, or at least this will be the prime mover, and although this would demand more legal and medical services, yet the much larger demand will be in the line of the scientific services which I have indicated. And, again, the number of lawyers and doctors who are being thrust upon the country may in each year be reckoned by the thousands against the tens of the chemists and mining engineers."

THE CHEMIST'S STORY.

BY H. H.

I am a chemist. I am the occupant of this responsible and important position in the med-away. It would just last five minutes and no more!

"Father!" shouted my boy, "if no assistance comes, this villain must die with us. I dare not free him. Help! help! help! help!"

Alas! I could not answer him.

Thank God! But some one else did. The fuse is burned up. The rope is on fire—the nitro-glycerine! The door opens; Tom Richards', on a midnight visit to the siek, has heard the cry; he comprehends all; seizes the can in his hand, the weight descends indeed, but not on the death-dealing oil. No; down, like an evil spirit, to give back a dull metallic echo from the stones of the cellar beneath.

We are saved,

Joe Johnson, the prisoner, was hanged, but his brother remains unpunished by the law, for he stabbed himself with a knife and thus escaped the hangman's rope.

ical college of P—

It was about 11 o'clock on a stormy evening that I bade good night to my student, Tom Richards, at the door of my laboratory, at the south end of the college buildings.

Tom was very anxious to know what would keep me up after twelve o'clock, so I told him I was about to commence analyzing the stomach of a Mrs. Johnson, whose husband lay in P— jail, just across the road from the college, on suspicion that he was the murderer.

As Tom was passing out of the college yard through the gate, his head turned, and bidding me good night, he brushed against a man standing with his back to the college and his face to the prison. The street lamp showed me that the man was in police uniform.

Re-entering my laboratory I took down a glass jar from the shelf and sat down behind my sink to examine it. An hour had passed since the departure of young Eichender I had been a student of mine a few years before. I thought him a good-hearted, intelligent fellow, only a little wild, and really began to hope that he might prove innocent; when, among the maerated food, I came upon a small, infinitesimal white grain. By careful manipulation and the use of my magnifying glass, I managed to get this upon a piece of smoked glass and examined it.

I was then certain I had discovered arsenic, but to make assurance doubly sure I deter-

"Do you really think so?" said a calm voice behind me.

I turned quickly and discovered a tall, lank I turned quickly and discovered a tall, lank policeman, having red, watery eyes, standing at my office door and staring in. His body looked as if it had been rolled out long before his hands, like a molasses candy stick. He had no expression at all in his face, and his policeman's hat was so large that threatened to settle down on his shoulders. His uniform reassured me, and I addressed him with some impetieure.

Messrs. James Robey, Nelson Baird and Otho Haydon and Professor T. M. Goodnight of impatience.

"My friend, I suppose I am wanted to attend an inquest, or what is your purpose?"

I was police surgeon as well as coroner.

"Don't bother, professor; the man ain't dead yet, but they say he will be before mornalways felt more than an ordinay friendship for John. It was his delight to look after

I touched my forehead, and so did he, as he said: "Ay, as I thought I'd drop in and tell you if you were going to the station tomorrow, to take a look and see if it is post mortem or not. Besides I wanted to see where I could always find you in case of need."

I bowed, and attributed his visit to a feeling of curiosity. He sat on the sink, and while his eyes wandered about like one who felt himself called upon to say something, he said: "Professor, there has been an accident this afternoon—terrible, too."

"What was it?"

"Nitro-glycerine explosion up in the iron

"Nitro-glycerine explosion up in the iron mills—a hundred fellow mortals busted."

"Sad!"
"Affecting, very." Here he rubbed his mouth with the back of his hand. "Professor, what is that nitro-glycerine?"

"It's a very dangerous article," I answered, happy to display my knowledge. "It has nearly twice the destructiveness of gunpowder, but, unlike it, does not explode on the application of heat. A red-hot coal dropped into it will not explode it. It will freeze. It is yellow and greasy."

he could have had his freedom by staying in Kentucky.

At the last reunion of the Orphan Brigade at Louisville in September, 1889, at least 50 men who had known John in the army, and who had been the recipients of many kindnesses at his hand, inquired about him. The secretary had been directed to send him an invitation to be present on the occasion, but he was unable to find his address just at the time when wanted. "You don't mean to say so," said the officer, "You don't mean to say so," said the officer, interrupting me in disagreeable tones in the middle of a choice extract from one of my lectures. "Why, but you haven't told me how it goes off. If the fire won't burst it, what in—(hem)—will?"

I told him if it were pressed, or anything fell on it, it would explode.

"Place it under the crusher of a cider mill, tribe it with a hamper, let a weight fell on it.

I told him if it were pressed, or anything fell on it, it would explode.

"Place it under the crusher of a cider mill, strike it with a hammer, let a weight fall on it rom a hight—"

"Yes," said the man, "and that rouses its volcaner, does it?"

"I suppose, professor, that ere can would make a mighty big noise if allowed to explode here all at once?"

"It would blow the entire building to atoms," said I, resuming the analysis of Mrs. Johnson's stomach.

"No?" I heard the policeman remark in deliberate yankee sones, "you don't say so?"

The next moment I lay on my back, a gag in my mouth, terribly frightened and sick at heart. Over me stood the policeman and the first thing that functionary did was—looking me straight in the face—to take off his nose. He then rid himself of his eyebrows, hair and cap, and became a determined-looking fellow, with the eyes of a fiend and the nose of a Roman.

"So you think," said the metamorphosed, in the tones of a gentleman, "that nothing can save Joe Johnson is fortunate enough to have in me a devoted friend, as well as brother. I have undertaken to save him, and he shall be saved. In order to accomplish this end it will be necessary to remove from the face of the earth not only the stomach of his miserable wife yonder, but also, my dear professor—ble wife yonder, but als

What terrible deed was in this brain hatching—was he going to murder me? Was it myself who was to hang, instead of Johnson? No; yes. He placed the line pulley-like over an arm of a hanging chandeller. This was altogether too slight a support even for one of my tender frame. It was not to be hanging, then. Under the weight on the floor he placed a can of nitro-glycerine; I recognized the yellow string; it was a fuse, and it would burn in sixty minutes. It would run across the marble slab; there was no hope of igniting any substance that would warn my friends. "Do you begin to see through it?" asked Joe Johnson's brother.

I believe I cursed him with my eyes. I could only breathe through my nostrils, and great veins were swelling and growing hot in my forchead. Drawing a match from his pocket, he lighted and applied it to the fuse; that little tyrant that gave a man an hour to live, to kill him at the end of it—that little irresponsible terror that, less merciful than Providence told a man the second he was to Having been a sufferer for two years and a half from a disease caused by a bruise on the leg, and having been cured by the CUTICURA REMEDIES when all other methods and remedies failed, I deem it my duty to recommend them. "In one hour," said the prisoner's brother, "you will be in heaven or hell. I will watch with you for half an hour, and the other half you will spend alone."

He sat down some minutes in a chair, watching the flame. Then he arose and took a piece of porcelain, with the murderer's name thereon, from the table, and shook his head gloomily. "Commit your soul to God's keeping," he said. "You hold the evidence of my brother's guilt—nothing can save you now."

Several Lines of Railroads Which Connect It With the Interior.

Beautiful Brunswick.

Surprising has been her past growth.

Phenomenal will be her future development.

One of the finest seaports on the Atlantic She has the advantages of an inland city, with the far-reaching opportunities of a coast market. Distinctive above many other coast cities, she enjoys the small death-rate of eight in

tesian wells. But a crowning emphasis is given the sur-passing advantages enjoyed by the "city by the sea" in an array of figures that speak for them-

In 1870 her population was 2,100; in 1880, 2,000; in 1884, 5,000; and now the city has 12,500 confident souls.

In 1885 the shipments of lumber amounted in money, to $1,231,282, while the year just past showed an aggregate value of a million and a half dollars.

In 1885 the total value of naval stores shipped was $382,049, while the business of 1889 showed nearly a million dollars, or an increase of over a half million in four years. In 1871 the total exports, or coast-wise ship ments, were less than a half million dollars; in 1888 they had reached $9,426,081, while in 1889 these figures were increased to nearly $11,000,000. In 1884, 4,000 bales of cotton were shipped from this port; in 1885, 8,000; in 1886, 35,000; in 1887, 82,000; in 1888,

130,432, and when the season of 1889 closes, it will show at least 180,000 bales. In 1885 the amount of wool handled at this port was 135,035 pounds, valued at $40,000; in 1888, 249,000 pounds, while the business of 1889 showed a favorable increase over this latter

In 1888 the total shipment of cross-ties was 125,000, and in 1889 this shipment was increased to 800,000—a noticeable increase in this profitable industry. In 1885 there was shipped 5,763 gallons of whale oil, and this had increased in 1888 to 7,931 gallons, from whales captured on the coast off the Brunswick harbor.

In 1884 the banking capital of Brunswick was $55,000, while now it is $550,000, which is being added to as the growth of the city de-

In 1879 the assessed value of property in the city was $1,300,000; in 1889 this had been increased to $4,544,305, and for the year 1890 it is $7,232,533.

To this strong array of figures, showing the comparative growth of Brunswick for the last six years (the period covering her most dedded material development), may be added the industrial growth and general advantages of industrial growth and general advantages of the city.

The Brunswick Brewing and Ice company, with a capital of $150,000, is one of the largest enterprises in the state.

The Brunswick Brick works, having a capital of $25,000, is a profitable institution, which demonstrates that brick of the finest quality can be manufactured here.

A barrel factory, of large capacity and sufficient capital, is one of the paying enterprises of a city fast growing in idustrial prominence.

The Kennon Manufacturing company, manufacturers of warps and yarns, operating under a capital of $50,000, supplies a long-felt want.

Two of the largest compresses in the world have been erected on her wharves, and these have greatly augmented her very large shipments.

The recently-established founder and me ute, are conducive to the health of the city, it being claimed that some of them possess pronounced medicinal properties.

A well-regulated system of public schools, being presided over by a superintendent and teachers of decided ability and experience, enjoy an attendance that show forth the excellent character of the institution, as well as emphasizing the absolute need of the system.

There are six churches in Brunswick, the Presbyterian, Episcopal, Methodist, Baptist, Catholic and Jewish, reflecting the various religious sentiments that form a part of this community, showing clearly, both in the zeal of their memberships and character of their houses, that the dromes of Christianity have no hold among that people.

Brunswick clearly deserves this appropriation from congress, and the chances for her receiving it are very favorable.

SULDING ACTIVITY.

That Brunswick is destined to be a city of large dimensions is evidenced not alone by her splendid naval advantages. The building activity which confronts the casual observer on all hands, shows a widespread feeling of confidence, which, after all builds and maintains cities.

The contracts that are in the hands of the

The contracts that are in the hands of the architects, with the various public and private buildings in course of erection, will compare favorably with such operations in any of the cities of Georgia, from Atlanta down to the other end of the list. This is a deliberate esti-

The Oglethorpe National bank is one of the most solid institutions in the city, having a capital of $100,000, and enjoying a paying patronage. It has some of the best business spirits of the city on its board of directors, besides having one of the finest buildings in the state. The officers of this institution are M. Ullman, president; W. E. Burbage, Vice-president; John D. Wright, cashier, and M. Ullman, W. E. Burbage, D. Glauber, F. M. Scarlet, W. E. Kay, J. P. Williams and Dudley T. Williams, directors.

The Merchants and Travelers' bank, operating under a subscribed capital of $100,000, with an authorized capital of $250,000, though a new institution, is starting upon a most pros-accord with the progress of the times, and Brunswick looks for wonderful advancement during the year now on.

The board is composed of J. J. Spears, mayor: M. Ullman, Thomas O'Connor, Jr.; J. S. Thomas, J. R. Cook, J. M. Madden, C. L. Parker, F. J. Doerflinger and H. N. Gann, councilmen; E. A. Nelson, clerk and treasurer, and Frank H. Harris, city atterney.

The Brunswick Company.

All concede that the Brunswick company

All concede that the Brunswick company has, perhaps, been the greatest agency of development in the city. Having a capital of $5,000,000 it has done everything possible to encourage manufacturing enterprises by giving tangible aid to the same, has liberally advertised their city, and has done and is doing everything that can be done to build up Brunswick's business property of every description. They own the Oglethorpe hotel, a magnificent three and a half story brick building, with a frontage of 267 feet, and provided with all the comforts and conveniences. This is by odds

The Board of Trade.

This is a recent organization, but a strong body of men, with C. Downing, Jr., president; J. S. Thomas and D. Glauber, first and second vice-presidents, and J. M. Dexter, secretary. They are now moving to get a through line of steamers from Baltimore, besides interesting themselves in everything that tends to build up Brunswick.

Law and Order.

Brunswick.

Law and Order.

The administration of law in Brunswick and Glynn county is such as to make this a desirable place of residence. Judge S. R. Atkinson, of the superior court, and Judge A. J. Crovatt, of the county court, are men of excellent character and ability.

In this connection it might be well to emphasize the truth that there are as elegant people here as ever graced society.

While decent people of every faith will vote with the democratic party, as a matter of preference, in state elections, after taking up their residence here or in other southern cities, still there is nothing like ostracism on account of political coloring. Mr. Bowling Whitfield, chairman of the county democracy, will answer any inquiry touching this question, that may be asked.

Brunswick's Future.

Brunswick's Future.

While her past growth has been gratifying in the extreme, the future of Brunswick is even more encouraging. In five years she will have a population of 25,000, while this will be nearly, if not quite doubled in the next decade.

Moves made to Brunswick are not mistakes.

HOGS AND THE TARIFF.

Showing How the High Protective Policy

Judge D. P. Baldwin in the Indianapolis Sentinel. A gentleman asked me on the street last Satarday: "Whom does the high tariff hurt?" I answered: "The farmer." Street arguments are always unprofitable, and, accordingly, I will elaborate this answer. To do so, I select as an illustration—of how our high tariff affects the farmer-the hog. This is only one of score of illustrations, but I select this as one that appeals to every Hoosier, and because it

that appeals to every Hoosier, and because it is easily understood.

The United States is the greatest hog-raising country in the whole world. We raise more than half the swine in north and south America, Europe, Asia, Africa and Australia combined. We raised over 50 million hogs last year, and of this number Indiana and Illinois produced over 7½ million. The United States exported last year 750 million dollars of products and these nearly 66 million dollars were in hog products. The hog product exports are over 63 per cent of all our animal meat, dairy, poultry and game products combined.

Now, the bulk of our hog products goes to England. The American hog products are excluded from France, Germany, Italy, etc., as a retaliation for our high tariff laws. In the same way Mexico excludes by a prohibitory tariff all our dressed beef, pork, lard, etc. The armies of Germany, France, Italy and Mexico number 2 million men, and the population of these countries over 100 millions, all of whom eat pork and consume lard, hams and other forms of hog meat. The result of these retaliatory tarifs is that there is much less foreign demand for the Hoosier farmer's meat. The hog crop for 1889 was worth nearly 292 millien dollars. Now, see the effect upon prices. Hogs today are lower than they have been for a generation. Hogs run this fall as low as $3. I believe now the price is a little better, perhaps they bring $4 per hundred.

Now it doesn't take a very smart man to see how high tariff hurts the farmer. The reason why Great Britain is our best customer for hog product is that these retaliatory tarifs of France Germany, etc., do not apply to her. By repacking, she can seil the American product as English goods.

ing, she can sell the American product as English goods.

This is the controlling reason of the low price of our hogs this spring. If we had the benefit of European markets, we could easily make our 50 million American hogs worth 500 million dollars, instead of 292 million dollars. Or, to put it plainer, with a free foreign market hogs in Indiana would be worth $6 to $6 instead of $6 apiece. With an unrestricted foreign market the 66 million dollars' worth of hog product sent abroad in 1889 could easily have been doubled; or our farmers could have realized 125 million dollars for this export alone instead of 66 million dollars.

Every pig pen in the United States is a protest against this short-sighted high tariff policy.

Ex-Governor Lee's Intentions

From the New York Press.

When General Fitzhugh Lee, of Virginia, was here a few days ago he was dined by a number of his New York friends at the Southern Society club his New York friends at the Southern Society clab-house. In the course of the evening he was asked what he was going to do next in politics. "Noth-ing," was the reply. "I've got a houseful of daugh-ters, and I'm going out of politics and into money-making until every one of them is provided with a dower and my own old age provided for. Then, if I am not as old as Methuselah, I may try my hand again at politics."

The Local Press.

I would be untrue to my subject were I to fall to make distinctive mention of the progressive press of this important city. No one agency does as much all-round good for a city as an independent, courageous press, and the people of Brunswick would be untrue to themselves and to the bright future of their favored city if they withheld support from the able and enterprising papers that give caste to those abroad.

The Daily Times, owned by a stock company and edited by A. I. Branham, is one of the brightest and most entertaining members of the Georgia press. It is doing a great work in advertising the splendid resources of Brunswick, and the various business interests of that city show a praiseworthy appreciation in the liberal patronage bestowed. Mr. Branham is a pithy and attractive writer, whose force has won for his paper a reputation more than state-wide.

Mr. J. L. Martin, his assistant, is a gentleman of varied experience and pronounced ability, and would sustain himself anywhere. His reportorial corps is bright and industrious, and the whole support of the paper strong.

The Evening Post is a new afternoon paper that won its position as a journal of vigorous policy and strong originality with the first few numbers. The personale of the paper are new acquisitions to Brunswick, and are already doing capital work in encouraging her development. The paper is owned by Messrs. A board of naval officers, acting under a resolution of congress, after making an examination of the south Atlantic seaports, with a view to establishing a naval station, recommended the port of Brunswick, assigning among many other reasons, its excellent healthfulness.

Being land-locked, Brunswick is comparatively safe against cyclones and storms, a feature emphasized by a prediction in Maury's physical geography that no serious damage from these need ever be feared by that city.

Her immense water frontage of thirty-seven miles, being easily approached, and by reason of the necessary depth of water being close in shore, requiring small outlay for wharf construction, gives Brunswick advantages not possessed by many ports.

all of which must find an outlet in some south Atlantic ports.

The tendency of vast systems of railroads, throughout the country, to seek south Atlantic ports for the transaction of commercial business and an exchange of freights with continental and English ports, is due largely to quick dispatch and cheap transportation, owing to the uncertain passage around the Florida reefs from the gulf.

The city is lighted by the Thomson-Houston system of electric lights and gas—the arc lights being used for the streets and the incandescent and gas for stores and private residences.

The street railroad of Brunswick is splendidly equipped, and it has proven an enterprise profitable alike to the city and to those who operate it, as well as a great convenience to the general public.

There is no one feature in the city's trade that speaks more eloquently of its onward success than good banking facilities, and the progressive banker is an individual that deserves universal support for the reason that he is the very life-blood that flows in the big artery of commercial growth.

The oldest banking institution of the city is the First National, which was organized in 1884, with a capital of $50,000, which has since been increased to $165,000, with a surplus and undivided profits fund of $60,000. It has had

The health of the city was made perfectly secure, when, during the mayoralty of Judge A. J. Crovatt, a system of artesian wells was inaugurated. This was emphasized last year, during Mayor Coison's term, when, to meet the needs of a growing population, the West system of sewerage was adopted.

Advice to Inquirers.

I hope that I will be pardoned for mentioning a few representative business spirits in this connection, whose deep interest in the growth of their city will cause them to cheerfully answer any inquiries that may be made by parties at a distance. A letter to either one of the following would by promptly noticed:

Kent and Frost, of Virginia and Chattanooga respectively, the former being editor and the latter its thorough business manager. Editor Kent is a graduate of the ancient college of William and Mary and a bachelor of law of the university of Virginia. Possessing strong convictions, he writes with a force and originality that are refreshing and entertaining. His reportorial help is bright and thrifty, and the Post is a journal of decided merit.

Messrs. Stacey and Son, the oldest publishers of the city, have retired from journalism, after years of prominent identification with the press, and will soon fit up a splendid job office and devote themselves exclusively to printing. It is useless to predict continued success for the gentlemen who have labored so long and faithfully for the welfare of their city.

A Startling Story of the First Virginia From the Richmond Dispatch.

It was May 29, 1890, and Richmond was astir from "turret-top to foundation-stone." Men and women in their best clothes thronged the principal streets, which were gayly decorated. Even nature lent her aid to the loyal sons and daughters of the south in their efforts to do honor to the memory of their greatest chief-tain, and sprinkled gold with a lavish hand over the tri-colored streamers which fluttered everywhere. It was a perfect day and a scene, long to be remembered by those who looked upon it. And the procession! It was a long time coming, but when at last it made its appearance every one felt repaid for waiting so

It was a noble sight with its ranks of battlescarred veterans leading the van, and its younger but no less gallant-looking volunteers following after—the "seed-corn" of the south—looking every one of them like chips of the old block, and entirely capable of following in the footsteps of their fathers in more ways than the peaceable one they were now pursuing. On they came—now beneath an arch of bay and laurel, where from a pedestral on either side a ragged soldier in confederate gray presented arms as they passed; again through a rain of blossoms showered upon them from a flowery stand filled with young girls.

So they passed, infantry and artillery, a goodly show, with the proud consciousness that every eye in that vast throng was fixed upon them, and every voice raised in their praise.

And now a blaze of yellow, on which the sunlight danced, announced the coming of the cavalry. They marched in column of fours, their horses keeping time to the stirring martial music. In the first file of four were only two men, who presented a great contrast to each other. One, a quiet, elderly fellow, rode steadily along, wishing most heartily that he was through with all the pomp and ceremony, and sheltered from the warm May sun, which beat most cruelly upon his heavy helmet. The ety men that Richmond boasted. He evidently took the greatest pride in his personal appearance, and as he rode slowly along not even the inspector-general could have found anything to criticise from his nodding yel-low plume to the tips of his cavalry boots. Except his horse! That horse was indeed a bitter drop in Randolph Carter's cup of bliss, and as they passed a group of laughing girls in the porch of a handsome house his whole attention was taken up in alternately spurring and silently objurgating the unhappy animal who had already been taxed beyond his strength before young Carter mounted him. The miserable, jaded beast made hardly any response as the cruel rowels were ed again and again into his sides, and the handsome cavalryman was filled with rage and humiliation as he saw the smiles of admira-tion on the faces of the girls change to amusement as he passed them.

Just as he had entirely made up his mind to go as soon as the parade was over and wreak a terrible vengeance upon old —— for sending him such a horse he was startled by a shadow which fell across him, and turning suddenly he perceived for the first time that a man was riding close beside him.

He was dressed in confederate gray, and a "He was dressed in confederate gray, and a cavalryman's soft felt hat with its drooping plume quite hid his face and head, which was bowed upon his breast. He appeared to be drenched with water, but Randolph Carter remembered afterward that the drops which ran from him in a continuous trickling stream made no impression upon the dusty road beneath them. One gauntleted hand hung by his side, the other reined in firmly the beautiful black horse he bestrode, and an air of utter weariness or serrow pervaded his whole appearance.

Carter glanced across the intruder to his companion in line, but as that soldier still seemed lost in reflection, he undertook to remonstrate with the new comer. "I expect you've missed your place, old fel-w." he began angrily. "You belong in front;

"Texpect you've missed you place, out released you." This is the First regiment of Virginia cavalry," the stranger replied, without raising his head. "My place is here."
Randolph had always boasted that he, as well as Nelson, could say, "What is fear? I never saw it," but now he felt an uncomfortable thrill ran down his backbone. The man's voice was so peculiar! Low and subdued, but perfectly distinct, absolutely without emphasis. He had just begun a further remonstrance when the stranger turned in his saddle slowly, and looked him full in the face!
Looked! No, not looked, for there were no eyes! in that dreadful countenance. Only two dark caverns marked the place where eyes had been, and in their stead, far down in the black depths, burned two spots of lambent flame.
Carter lost all sense of military discipline, all care of appearances, and gathered up his reins for a precipitate flight, but his horrible companion reached out his hand and touched him lightly on the breast just over the heart, and the terrified young man felt with a desperate shudder that all power to move had left him.
Only his horse kept steadily on as if nothing perate shudder that all power to move had left him.

Only his horse kept steadily on as if nothing had happened, with the noisless black stead always abreast of him.

"Listen to me, boy," the spectre said, still in that blood-curdling, monotonous tone. "I should not have molested you had you not addressed me. Now you must hear me.

"On the 29th of May, twenty-seven years ago, I was as young and full of life as you. Aye, more, for I was engaged to be married to one of the most beautiful girls in Richmond. She lived in that very house yonder," and again that bony hand was raised to point out one of the handsomest old mansions on Franklin street.

again that bony hand was raised to point out one of the handsomest old mansions on Franklin street.

Carter looked with unseeing eyes in the direction indicated to him. The windows were filled with people whom he knew, but all sense of personal vanity was gone now, and he only thought of escape from his horrible position. But his limbs feit utterly powerless and his tongue clove to the roof of his mouth. Even the sun shone coldly upon him. That touch upon his heart seemed to have sent ice through his veins that nothing would ever melt again. The spectre recalled his attention by a low wail—the wail of a lost spirit, indeed.

"Twenty-seven years ago today I parted from her," it said. "My regiment was ordered to the front. When I went to tell her goodbye she laid her head upon my breast and promised to be faithful until death. To bid me Godspeed we arranged that she was to watch for us at a certain window of her home and wave me a last farewell as I rode nast. As we marched up the street I could see the house for squares away, and I fixed my gaze upon it froin the first moment it came in view. But I could not ree her at the window and strained to discover if she was in the room. She is overcome with griet, I thought, and is afraid that if I see her tear-stained face it will dishearten me. "There was a large pier-glass at right angles with the window, and suddenly as I came in front of the house I saw her reflected in the glass. Saw her, curses upon her, in the arms of another man!

"Boy, my soul died at that moment. I felt it die, and all that was left of me turned into a raging brute. If I could have killed her then I would have done it, but I had no chance.

"That night I deserted and rode back to "In no longer cared for honor. If I had been captured and shot my only feeling would have been regret that I had not killed her or him; I hardly cared which. I hoped to find them together and kill them both.

"I did not do that, but I found him walking up the street, and shot him down from behind a tree as I would a dog. Then I took him and laid him at her gate. It was only a few steps further on, but as his life-blood trickled over my hands I felt happier than I had ever done before. If I could have bathed my heart in that blood I should have been happier still.

"Then I started back to the place where my horse was tied. He was some distance out of town, near a yard with a well, in it, on this same road. I felt the fires of hell consuming ble will be will

"Company, right front into line!" rang out the clear voice of the captain. "Dress up, Mr. Carter!"
With a sob of relie! Carter wheeled his horse into line. They had almost reached the Lee monument, and he shuddered to see that they were just passing the old Allen well. But it had been recently filled up, and its secret, if it had one, forever shidden from the eyes of man.

How He Lost His Tail.

From the New York Ledger. "Gentlemen," said a tall Kentuckian, haul-ing up and leisurely taking his seat in a vacant chair, "don't make fun of that dog, if you please," and, with a face of profound melancholy and touching pathos, he added, "unless you want to hurt his feelings."

"O, of course not, sir, if you dislike it. But, pray, how did he come to be curtailed of his fair proportions?"

"Well, gentlemen, I'll tell you," said the "Well, gentlemen, I'll tell you," said the Kentuckian, replenishing the spacious hollow of his cheek with a quid of tobacco. "That that dog was the greatest b'ar hunter of Kaintuck. A few years ago I nse dtake my riffe and old Riptearer of an afternoon, and think nothing of killing ten b'ars. One cold day in the middle of winter, bein' troubled a good deal with an old he-b'ar that used to carry off our pigs by the dozen, I started out with Riptearer, determined to kill the old rascal or die in the attempt.

"Well, after we had gone about, two miles through the woods we all of a sudden came right smack on the old b'ar, with his wife and three cubs. I know'd I couldn't shoot 'em all at once, and I know'd if I killed either of the old 'uns t'other would make at me, for I could see they were mortal hungry. So says I, 'Rip, what'll we do?' Rip know'd what I was sayin', and without waitin' to hold any confab about it he gave a growl and pitched right in among them. With that I let fly at the she-b'ar, cos I know'd she was the worst when the cubs was about. Over she rolled, as dead as a cubs was about. Over she rolled, as dead as a mackerel.

"Rip then hitched on the he-b'ar, and they had a most mighty tussel for about five minutes, when the b'ar began to roar enough like blue murder. I run up then and knocked his brains out with the but end of my rifie. The cubs were so skeered and cold that I killed 'em all in about two minutes with my knife. But Rip took on terrible about my knockin' off the old b'ar on the head. At fust I thought he was going to tackle me, and says I, 'Rip, that's downright ungrateful.' With that he sneaked off in a huff, but I could easily see he was terrible mad yet.

"Well, I left the b'ars all on the ground, concluding to call back with the neighbors for 'em as soon as I could let 'em know. On the way home Rip kep 'ahead of me. Every time he thought how I killed the old b'ar his tail would stand right up on end, he was powerful

"It was getting night, and began to grow freezin' cold. About half a mile from the house Kip came to a halt, thinkin' he'd have another look back in the direction of the b'ar. The scent of 'em raised his dander wuss than ever. His tail stood right squar' up, as stiff as a hoe-handle. Just then it came on colder than ever, and poor Rip's tail friz exactly as it stood. I was in a bad fix—I had no fire to thaw it. While I thinking what to do to get it down ag'in a big buck deer sprung up and darted right over the fence about fifty yards alread. Rip did not wait to be told whar to go, but pitched arter the deer. I cracked away with my rifle, and just raised the fuzz between his horns. When Rip got to the fence he thought he'd make a short cut, so he dashed right through, but his tail was so brittle it broke off between the rails. Poor old Rip was done for good. He never hada tail to show arter that—it broke his spirit as well as his tail; and that's how he come to lose it. And now, gentlemen, I'm gettin' a little dry, and, if you have no objection, we'll take a horn."

The Farmers and the Politicians.

Independent political action and unnatural and unnatural party alliances are not the means by which the agricultural producers will obtain a redress of their grievances. Their true and safe policy is to bring all their influence to bear upon the dominant party in each state from within, wherever they are in a position to do this by reason of their larger affiliation with the ruling party, and there are few states in which they cannot do this successfully. As to this, the Illicannot do this successfully. As to this, the Illi nois farmers have taken a sensible position and one which can be commended to general

SCROFULA. ME S.S.S. MIN

Scrofula All His Life.

I consider my cure by S. S. S. one of the most wonderful on record. I had the worst type of Scrofula from my infancy until 22 years of age. My whole young life was embittered and made miserable by the loathsome disease. I not only suffered from the Scrofula, but was so marked that I was ashamed to associate with, and was avoided by my playmates and fellowworkmen. I tried every known patent medcine, and was first and last attended by more than a dozen reputable physicians, but in spite of all the disease continued to grow worse. About four years ago a friend from Pittsburg advised me to take S. S., which I did, and after taking seven bottles I was cured sound and well. The old skin peeled off and was replaced by a new skin, as smooth and free from blemish as any person's. I have had no return HENRY V. SMITH, Eczema from Childhood.

When an infant my body broke out all over with an eruption or rash, which became more aggravated as I grew older. From early childhood until I was grown my family spent a fortune trying to cure me of the disease. Every noted physician in our section was tried or consulted. When I came of age I visted Hot Springs, Ark., and was treated there by the best medical men, but was not benefited. After that, under the advice of a noted specialist, I tried the celebrated Clifton Springs, New York, without any good results. When all things had failed, I determined to try S. S. S., and in four months was entirely cured. The terrible Eczema was all gone, not a sign left; my general health built up, and I have never had any return of the disease. I have since ecommended S. S. S. to a number of friends for skin diseases, eruptions, etc., and have never known of a failure to cure. GEO. W. IRWIN, Irwin, Pa

DURHAM'S DISPLAY OF PUSH AND GRIT

Energy. THE WAND OF KING TOBACCO

Is Waved Over a Land of Peace and Plenty.

purham, N. C., May 17.—[Special Correspondence]—There is no city in the United States with more push, grit and enterprise to the square inch, than right here in this plucky little tobecco city of Durham.

And with her big factories towering high up towards the clouds and her massive church seeples reaching up towards the heavens, she nts a striking appearance to strangers passing this way.

Durham is known the world over as the home of that celebrated smoking tobacco, the "Durham Bull" and the great and good Duke's eigarettes. It is the home of two of the no-blest sons of the south, and the land where the tobacco plant flourishes. As a tobacco market, Durham has

As a tobacco market, Durham has always been in the lead in North Carolina. The first ware-house system was established here in 1868, and grew gradually in favor from one million pounds sold that year, until in '78, when twenty millions were sold on the Durham market. At that time other markets began to spring up throughout the tobacco belt and somewhat detracted from the Durham market, although the effect was never keenly felt, and today Durham still leads in quantity and quality of grades sold. The superior quality of the tobacco sold here is admitted by the unrivaled ancess of the manufacturers here and the eageness of manufacturers throughout the United States to purchase much of their stock in this market. The soil here is particularly adapted to the growth of fine yellow leaf, suitable for good unoking qualities, being void of nicotine and the bitter taste that characterizes the tobacco raised in many sections.

There are three large ware-houses here for the sale of the leaf, and every day the loud, coarse voice of the great tobacco auctioneer can be heard in the land. The tobacco is graded by the farmers, and hauled in wagons and placed on the floor in different grades so that the purchaser has the opportunity to select any grade that he may desire, from the common scrap to the finest wrapper that is to be found upon any market, varying in price from $2 per hundred to $150. Great is Durham's tobacco market.

FACTORIES.

The manufacture of tobacco takes the lead in the industrial vocations of Durham. It is said that the ware-houses have paid on an average yearly, for the last ten years, to the farmers for their tobacco sold here the sum of $1,250,000. Besides the tobacco industry there $1,250,000. Besides the tobacco industry there are other large manufacturing industries, such wood-mills, Durham Fertilizer company, Durham Cotton mills, and a large snuff manufactory. Added to these establishments are many others yet in embryo, which will be started as soon as the exigencies of the times demand it. If capital is looking for an investment, it can be judiciously used here, certain to be returned ten-fold, and more than likely twenty-five-fold.

globe, where the quality is pronounced by connoisseurs as being par excellence. The factory has a capacity of 250,000 pounds per day, and the company has paid the government on an average more than $600,000 per year in taxes, 5or the last ten years.

This factory is undoubtedly one of the most imposing buildings of its character in the state, and with its adjuncts covers over twenty acres of ground. It is made of brick and granite, and is substantial in architectural beauty. It has a frontage of 350 feet, is four stories high and 160 feet in length.

To gain some idea regarding the immense business of this concern, I may here state that in four consecutive years they paid to the government $2,076,665.81 for stamps on the genuine Bull Durham tobacco. About 1,200 cases of twenty-five pounds each are shipped daily, with 20,000 pounds allowed to a car-load, and these shipments go to all parts of the world, gaining in favor and reputation yearly. They employ nearly 1,000 hands. The company use 110,000 yards of cloth a month for sacking their tobacco, or a total of 1,400,000 yards per annum.

There is hardly a man, woman, boy or girl in

DUKE'S CIGARETTE FACTORY.

Among the great men of North Carolina, none stand more prominently than Hon. Washington Duke, of Durham, the founder of the gigantic and now stupendous cigarette factories of W. Duke, Sons & Co. Although their factories were sold to the American Cigarette company, sometime ago, they are yet known as 'the Duke's.'

The buildings in Durham alone cover 105,000 mare feet of floor space. They have twenty-five Bousack cigarette machines that turn out $50 cigarettes a minute, or equal to the work of 2,000 hands. They have grown from the grown from the second part of the world. The humble peddler nufactured tobacco, ruined by the war, compelled for subsistence to travel through of country solling from his wagon, the small stock drawn by a pair of mules, all the rawages of war had left him, now enjoys the luxuries of the humble peddler humandsome fortune, and a few weeks ago gave his check for $85,000 as an inducement to have the State Methodist college removed from its present location to Durham.

Mr. W. Duke began the (manufacture of moking tobacco in the vicinity of Durham, in the fall of the year 1865, removing to Durham during 1872 or 1873. Prospering by his transfer of locality, his business has expanded, requiring increase of room and facilities for manufacture. The trade of this house extends throughout the entire civilized world. The stock is bought altogether on the Durham arket.

DURHAM'S BANK.

Durham boasts of two excellent national banks.

Durham boasts of two excellent national banks.

The Girst National commenced business in '88 with Mr. J. S. Carr, prosident; Mr. Leo. D. Heartt, cashier and Mr. C. A. Jordan, teller. It has had a most successful career, and now has deposits from nearly all portions of the state. It possessing the entire confidence of the community from the start, has had a steady growth. Mr. Heartt, the courteous cashier, is a most excellent official with twenty years' experience. Although not an old citizen of Durham the people have shown their appreciation of sterling worth by electing him with a big majority on the city council and he is now chairman of the finance committee.

The Morehead Banking company was organized in '89, succeeding that well-known banking house of Eugene Morehead & Co.

It was then made a national bank and today has a capital of $150,000. Mr. W. A. Williard is president; Mr. J. T. Pinnix, vice-president; Mr. W. M. Morgan, cashier, and M. C. E. Murray, teller. Mr. Morgan has had twelve years' experience in the banking business, and no official is better "up" than is he. Mr. Morgan is variously interested in the progressive spirit of Durham, and he is always

DURHAM MEDICATED CIGARETTES.

What promises to be one of the leading industries of the south at no distant day is the Durham Medicated Cigarette company.

This wonderful cigarette was invented by Dr. R. F. Whitehurst, the affable and industrious secretary and treasurer of the company.

They are made of purely vegetable compound, and contain neither tobacco nor opiates, and are recommended as a remedy for all nervous diseases, sleeplessness, headache, colds, throat diseases, etc., and have been found very effectual in the treatment of such ailments. Many voluntary testimonials have been received from persons who have used them. A Durham physician, who used them for catarrh and kindred complaints, says that he "found in every case that relief has been instantaneous. They are pleasant and convenient, and one derives pleasure from their use as being greatly benefited at the same time. I have never used a remedy for the above complaints that in any way equals them." Ladies and children have used them with the best results.

The company was incorporated and began business three months ago. Although it commanded ample capital, no flourish was made, and business was begun in a modest way. But demands for the cigarettes have become so great that now it has for its home a four-story building 30x60 feet, and 100 hands are employed, making 100,000 cigarettes daily. The goods are shipped to all parts of the United States. The officers of the company are: R. B. Bridgers, president; P. W. Vaughan, vice-president; R. F. Whitehurst, secretary and treasurer; R. B. Bridgers, J. S. Carr, E. W. Kennedy, P. W. Vaughan, T. J. Lambe, James H. Southgate and R. F. Whitehurst, directors. DURHAM MEDICATED CIGARETTES.

To write a complete description of the bustling city of the Durham of today would require more time than I have to devote to it now. In a month or two, however, it will afford me much pleasure to again visit here and tell all I can learn. Whatever sins may be charged up to the Durham of the past, does not materially affect the pushing, progressive and gritty Durham of today, and that she is keeping pace with the onward march of progress no one can deny. With ample railroad facilities and that pluck and go-ahead spiritwhich have characterized her citizens, Durham is bound to become a city of importance, not only to the south, but the world at large.

A town that won't stand still, cannot be DURHAM OF TODAY.

A town that won't stand still, cannot be That is Durham!

THE LOCAL PRESS. The newspaper men of Durham deserve praise for the earnest work in behalf of the city. There are two dailies printed here—the "Sun" and the "Globe." The former is owned and edited by Mr. James A. Robinson, one of the best newspaper writers in North Carolina. It should be stated that Mr. Robinson's rife a ledy of early the refrequency and say wife, a lady of culture, refinement and ex-ceptionally literary ability, renders her hus-band much assistance in editing the sprightly

"Sun."
The "Globe" is owned by Mr. T. B. Eld-ridge, a gentleman of considerable journalistic experience and influence among the state press. Mr. R. E. is city editor of the "Globe."

Mr. E. C. Hackney is the oldest editor in Durham, having for a long time owned and edited the "Weekly Recorder." Mr. Hackney is a forcible writer and possesses that happy faculty of making a success of anything he undertakes. He is now editor of a tobacco journal published at Richmond, Va., in addition to his Durham paper.

MONDAY, MAY 19, AT 4:30 P M

Right on the electric car line and surrounded by some of the best neighbors in Atlanta. There is no more pleasant place to live than upon this beautiful, healthy hill. The streets have just been elegantly paved, new sidewalks, with gas and water everywhere. The residences are complete, having the most approved and modern plumbing, closets, etc. This corner is only two blocks from Feachtree street and exceedingly near the very heart of the city, where real estate is worth $100 per inch. This is a rare chance for blocks from Peachtree street and exceedingly near the very heart of the city, where real estate is worth $100 per inch. This is a rare chance for parties moving into Atlanta to secure a first-class location. The rapidly increasing population has already bought nearly every close-in handsome residence upon the market. We propose to sell you those beautiful and valuable places for just what you feel disposed to pay for them. Examine both places, look at the conveniences, the grand shade and smooth paved walks leading from substantial rock steps into these lots; take it all in and then buy you a home on this corner, either the six or five-room house. You will certainly not buy for as little money during your life as at my

It had been a bitter summer for John Long. At least, it ought to have been. It was a miserable career, indeed, that he regarded, if he had thrown away several years and considera-ble money at college, and had wasted some months in a business office, he had employed himself as a campaign speaker in a far off state—first on one side, but finally on the other.

After the election, when he had used all the noney he had made and all he could borrow at home, he had tramped to Cincinnati, for miles and borrowed a hundred dollars of his uncle. Then, with a harum-scarum chum, he pro-jected a magazine. The prospectus was bril-liant; after the first number the editors left the city, John going home and the chum into sanctuary to develop some new scheme.

The new scheme deloped. It took the shape of a school for boys—the Kentucky classical college, it was to be called. The chum afore-said furnished the capital this time. John procured the degrees of A. M. and Ph. D., they got out a glowing catalogue, and the Kentucky classical college opened with fine prospects on September 17. By October 1 two boys had come. They were graduated with honors on the 2d and the faculty got home as best it

So John had been home all summer. To be sure, he had not been falle. He had laid out a trip through Europe, which he proposed to tramp after the fashion of Bayard Taylor, writing letters home to defray expenses.

He had correspond with all the leading jour nals, but somehow had not succeeded in impressing any sufficiently to get an advance upon which to start. Then, too, he had opened the Great Western Literary burean, which institution read, criticised, and touched up MSS. for would be authors and did other such literary work. This was what the prospectus an-nounced; however, it was never called upon

It was becoming a very apparent thing that John Long was "no account." And he knew it well enough; none realized more than he that he was visionary, impracticable, and lazy; he laughed at his own schemes, and had no faith in their success, yet he vowed he would starve before he would work like other men. If ever he had a serious moment he must have despised himself; yet I do not know that he did.

know that he did.

He seemed to pique himself on his lack of what we call common sense; he avowed himself brother to fools; he used to say that, like Lamb, his sympathies were with the foolish virgins and the man who built his house upon the sand. I have known him to spend his last dollar for a theater seat, or for a dinner at an uptown hotel, when he knew he would have no supper and no bed at night.

If John Long had had the genius of Poe or Goldsmith you might admire him. We expect improvidence as to common things in men of genius, But John was only a comnouplace fellow; never did a brilliant thing that I know of. He might have made a successful man, as men go; he was, perhaps, as that I know of. He might have made a successful man, as men go; he was, perhaps, as bright as the average; but at a certain point in his life he failed to be impressed with the practicalness of living, and went off into idling and dreaming.

Now, there was Arthur Brooks. The two boys had a fair start in life; I really believe John was the more clever; but Arthur always got on best. John was a disappointment, even when he was a boy, and it was so through all his life. He lacked the element of success.

John and Arthur were great friends; they grew out of boyhood together, and were loyal to each other as young men—yes, even after than became rivals for the affections of Lucy

John and Arthur were great friends; they grew out of boyhood tegether, and were loyal to each other as young men—yes, even after they became rivals for the affections of Lucy Harris. What on earth had become of what little wit John Long had, when he thought of entangling any woman in his own miserable existence, I do not know. But Lucy undoubtedly liked him. You do not care to know how great friends they became; how, of all living beings, John poured out his heart to her, and how tender and good she was to him. You might like to know that she was beautiful, with a bewitching face and true eyes, and all that could be asked for in a lovely girl. Ah, they were good friends, John and Lucy, and they talked of those things that burdened most heavily their foolish young hearts; the mystery of that life into which they had been flung and that frightened them when first they were awakening to it, the awfunlness of life and of the scepter of life. And so John grew to love the sweet girl with all his heart. It is little enough good that can be said of John Long, but his life was the better that he carried through it always a pure love for Lucy. He never told her of it. It is not to be doubted that he would have been foolish enough to have done so; but one evening, when he was heme the last time, she told him as she would have told her bother of her betrothal to Arthur Brooks. It was not till she was through that the realization of what it doubted that he would have been foolish enough to have done so; but one evening, when he was heme the last time, she told him as she would have told her brother of her betrothal to Arthur Brooks. It was not till she was through that the realization of what it was to John flashed upon her. And John told her he would go away. And in the startight she lifted up her face for his kiss.

John left that very night. It may be that after that he would have liked to have made a man of himself, but his old habits were upon him. He wandered about the south for a few months, persuading himself that he was studying the race question, and that presently he would write a series of magazine articles that would startle the country. Finally he brought up at Atlanta with his money gone. Of course, he had to look for work then, and, with unusual good luck, he managed to get a position of one of the morning papers.

It would have been strange if he had held it longer than four months, and he did not. It was early one morning in October, after his own work was up, that, as he sat at the telegraph editor's desk, his eye was caught by a special which had just come in. It was the story of the murder of William Harris, the father of Lucy. He had been found dead and by poison. A dispute, a peculiar will, and other circumstances indicating motive, pointed to the newly married husband of Lucy Harris as the murderer. Arthur Brooks had been arrested and was now in the county jail. The dispatch spoke of smothered talk of Lynchinging, and said the jail was an old one and not strong. John Long easily pictured the violence with which the old love for Brooks would turn into an overwhelming wave of wrath; he knew there would be no stopping to weigh the evidence.

John Long walked out into the early morning air. He drank in the charm of life. The shadows lay long, and there was a thrill and a jey in every breath. How hard for Brooks, with the blood of youth in his veins, to yield his life. How could Lucy live without him? Never before had John so fe cold hand of winter tears down the whole royal panorama."

It was no little thing that the man that could appreciate life thus should give it up.

Noon found him on the north-bound train; by the next noon, he was in Cincinnati; and by night home. The village was quiet; he went to his old room and went to bed. During the night a train went thundering through the valley; he heard the whistle and the roar of the fires when the furnace door was opened, he heard it cross the bridge and go down between the hills till the sound faded into an echo, and then died. And, as in years before, his fancy followed it through the night, out of the valley, into day and the warm and cheerful world.

his fancy followed it through the night, out of the valley, into day and the warm and cheerful world.

The morning came; the light crept through the little panes as it had done years before. John Long had been thinking as he rolled homeward on the train; he had laid another scheme, and he felt sure this one would not fail. And the last twenty years had passed from his mind, and he was living again his old innocent childhood. He walked out through the village and stopped at the house on the hill, where he had come to live with his aunt when his father in the city died; he looked from its verands far down the dusty pike, and remembered how, his first spring there, the waters of the river rose and covered it as far as the eye could reach. He stood long and watched the shadows chase each other across the hills on the other side of the valley, as he used to do, long summer days.

There was no mistaking the temper of the peeple with regard to the marder of William Harris. With the night shadows a hush fell on the town. Mothers gathered their children into the house, and closed fast the doors. Men might have been seen straggling down the east pike, on horse and afoot. They stopped on the first bridge out, and at midnight, from out the shadows of its ancient rafters, a troop of silent men marched forth. Straight to the jail they went; they never asked for the keys, no wanted them. A stout stick on the shoulders of a dozen men broke down the door at a few blows. They knew the cell; it had but frail bars, and they were soon down. In thirty minutes after the lynchers left their rendezvous Arthur Brooks was in their hands.

The preparations were simple. A short rope rung from the sign of the Hamble house, and Arthur Brooks was in their hands.

The preparations were simple. A short rope lung from the sign of the Hamble house, and underneath it was a store box. Upon this Brooks was hoisted.

"Shall he die?" said the man who held the rope. These were the first words spoken.

"Let him die!" answered a hundred voices in a terrible bass. And a thrill of horrid interest ran through them as they waited for the final moment.

But a third figure was upon the box. It was that of John Long. He took the noose from off Brook's neck and placed it about his own. He said not a word but stood with folded arms and head thrown back. And one of them told me that, standing so in the moonlight, something of his old boyish beauty came into his face and made him look like the noble, man he might have made. night have made:

The mob was at a loss,
"Are you guilty, instead of Brooks?" the

"Are you guilty, instead of Brooks?" they shouted.

"Brooks is innocent," said Long.

"Did you kill Harris?"

"Brooks is innocent."

"Never mind him," they shouted then.

"Up with Brooks! String him up!"

"Gentlemen," said John Long, "I am guilty, and not Brooks. I meant the poison for Lucy, and her father got it."

God forgive him the lie! In the instant that followed perhaps he wondered if the truth would ever be known, and whether Lucy's children would ever play above his grave, and whether she would teach them the meaning of the words: "Greater love hath ne man than this, that he lay down his life for his friend." Perhaps, dying so in dishonor and shame, the merciful Father permitted him to know that it would be so. Perhaps he never heard the yell with which they pushed the box out from under him. They stood still then and let him hang. Presently one of them noticed that his hand was quite cold.

Common talk often says of a given man, "His word is good as his bond." With such a one you need only a verbal contract. Do you ever hear "His act is good as your thought?" No, you do not. You'd never expect that your wish should control another's action, but that is just what our public expects, requires of us.

There is an unwritten, unspoken contract between us which implies that what the public desires we

We recognize the agreement—we obey. And thus results this Golden Period of Bargains in the Merrie Month o' May.

A pat denial.

Some anonymous Fashion scribe and the little unknown paragraph is going the rounds.

It belongs to us to protect the public from impositions and our business from injury.

These light, wonderfully fine and oddly colored fabrics are the blue ribbon takers for style, and any "special correspondent," commenting on the subject of Dress that says to the contrary convicts himself thereby of gross ignorance or culpable fraud.

This is only one of many arrogant assumptions that such authors are constantly flaunting before the public. Some impositions result from lack of knowledge, some from design. The latter distinction is moral, the former intellectual. Neither can thrive.

If comparisons were not odious, and the mere suggestion of personalities not distasteful, the foregoing charge could be sustained and accentuated with facts. But this is not an indictment, only a correction refutation.

REV. SAM SMALL LEAVES. Rev. Sam Small left last night to be gone

This is for an engagement at Ogden, Utah. His abscence doesn't mean a let-up in the canvass in his interest. His race is left in the hands of his friends, and they are actively at work for him.
A PROHIBITION CAUCUS.

A meeting of prominent prohibitionists was held a night or two ago, the proceedings of which leaked out yesterday.

It appears that the meeting was called by the particular friends, among the prohibition-ists, of Rev. Sam Small, to consult as to the best course to pursue concerning the legislative race.

Mr. Tom Cerrigan presided, and Mr. Small was present. Several speeches were made, and two or three of the speakers were strongly in favor of putting out a full ticket of prohib tionists to meet the issue, making the race as such, and going before the people on the clean cut proposition, "Prohibition versus anti-pro-

Several names were mentioned to make a full ticket, with Mr. Small as one of three, and for a while it seemed as if that policy would

Mr. Small in the meantime had kept very quiet, listening to what was going on and talking but little.

The more conservative members of the caucus protested against making a square prohibition campaign, and sentiment was pretty well divided until Mr. Small arose.

"Gentlemen," said he in substance, "yo are getting ready to throw all the fat in the fire, or to throw me in the fire. It is not the thing to make a prohibition issue in this elec-You asked me to make the race to represent the large element that believes as we do, and who ought to, and feel as if they had a right to, have representation from their own number in the legislature. If you make this square issue you will upset everything, and as far as I am concerned, I do not know that I would be willing to make the race under such

Mr. Small proceeded on this line, urging that the right thing for the prohibitionists to do was to ask that they have one representative, and he thought that the concervative antis and the people of the county would be willing to grant the request for the sake of harmony.

Mr. Small's sentiments captured the audience, and all propositions for a square prohibition fight were withdrawn, and the meeting adjourned with the understanding that Mr. Small only | would make the race as far as the prohibitionists were concerned.

The report of this meeting came directly to a reporter of THE CONSTITUTION, and from several sources, all agreeing that it can be put down as positive, that all rumors of other prohibitionists, besides Mr. Small, making the race, are unfounded.

There is not a truer democrat in Georgia than Clark Howell, or a man who could fill this honorable and important a man who could fill this honorable and important position more satisfactorily or with greater ability. He is doing noble work in the upbuilding of his state and the advancement of his people, and is as true to his principles as is the needle to the pole. This is a day of new deals, and the young men of Georgia will step forward and demand a share in the government of their state. Mr. Howell is a recognized leader of the young democracy, and the boys are with him to a man. Clark Howell doubtless has opponents, but we do not believe he has an enemy in the world. He is always ready to extend a helping hand, and his whole aim and ambition is to promote the success of his party, develop his state, and labor for the prosperity of his people. He is a good and true man wherever you place him, and in the speaker's chair will reflect great credit upon himself and honori on his state. We have no doubt of his election.

position than Hon. Clark Howell, of Fulton county. Mr. Howell has served with eminent distinction through two terms of the legislature and carned a reputation for wisdom and prudence as a legislator, second to none in that body.

He is a young man of brilliant mental attainments, full of energy, and that spirit of progress which characterizes our progressive state. Withal, he is of highest character and broad information, fully conversant upon all public measures and he fully conversant upon all public measures and he would preside over the legislature with dignity and wisdom. As matters now stand, we believe Mr. Howell is the most available and suitable man

The Macon Evening News, says:
It seems that the Hon. Clark Howell won the first round Monday in the legislative race in Fulton county, by the county democratic executive committee deciding to hold a primary on the third Wednesday in July. This means if Mr. Howell is nominated for the house he will commence an active canvass for speaker.

This brilliant young legislator has our most carnest wishes for his success in both undertakings. We believe that the democracy of Fulton will return him triumphantly to the house, and that he will be elected the presiding officer of that large and representative body of the patriotism and ability of Georgia. We believe that Mr. Howell will make an admirable speaker. We hereby unqualifiedly endorse his candidacy in preference to that of any one yet named for the high and honorable position.

Mr. Ashworth quietly put the knife in his pocket, and reported to Sheriff Thomas that there was no danger of a suicide. He had nipped it in the bud.

There was a request from Primrose's lawyers to have him sent to the hospital on account of his physical condition.

The county physician visited Primrose terdry, and reported to Judge Van Epps that Primrose's condition was not such as to require his removal to a hospital, consequently he was kept in jail and will remain there until his trial, which will take place in July.

Letters From The People.

ATLANTA, May 17.—Editors Constitution:
Referring to the communication of Mr. A. J. Wedderburn in today's Constitution, it appears that this champion of the Conger lard bill is sorely pushed for facts to make out his case. He states that "the compound lard manufacturer comes south and buys the cotton-seed oil at about 2 ceuts per pound," whereas, the truth is that at no time within the past ten years has prime cotton-seed oil sold for less then 31 to 4 cents reasonable. seed oil soid for less than 3½ to 4 cents per pound, f. b. b. mills, and without having the figures at my immediate command, I am safe in saying that the average price paid within that time has been fully 4 cents per pound. The price of cotton-seed has advanced from 25 to 33 per cent within the past four years, and that does not look as though the farmer is being robbed of his product, as Mr. Wedderburn asserts. On the centrary the farmer has for the past year received a price for his seed in excess of what the mills could afford to pay and make a reasonable profit on their Avestment.

All these are facts susceptible of easy verification in every cotton producing state in the south. Respectfully, eed oil sold for less than 31/2 to 4 cents per pound,

While the sunny days are coming, And the winter drear has fled. We are thinking of our loved one In life's golden summer dead, He's the eldest: father's darling, His most cherished hope and pride; Loying, kind and noble-hearted— He was taken from our side.

Sharp the stroke and keen the anguish None but stricken hearts can know.
'Tis our Father holds the chisel, From His hand descends the blow. In his boundless love and wisdom Oft are taken from our sight.

The fact that the order is styled "workmen," The fact that the order is styled "workmen," gave occasion to many curious questions.

The order was established long before any of the societies of "workingmen," and the word "workmen" was adopted as expressing the idea of men working for each other in a charitable way. But since the labor agitations of late years, the "workingmen" has become synonymous with some labor organization, hence the curious mistake made by people unfamiliar with the aims and objects of this great benevolent order, which is growing greater and stronger every day throughout the United States and Canada.

The members were kept too busy at work to be able so spend much time in social enjoyments, but they were shown every possible courtesy during their stay in the city. The Red Men.

The Red Men.

The noble order of Improved Red Men assembled in great council at Athens during the past week. There were many eminent citizens of the state present at the meeting, but the delegation from Atlanta was probably the largest, as the four tribes—Cherokee, Comanche, Mohawk and Modoc—represent a sum total of nearly one thousand warriors.

The twenty-five delegates from this city returned from Athens with glad hearts, having enjoyed the hospitalities of the classic city that were tendered them in the most generous manner. Following are the officers elected: Robert L. Daniel, Griffin, Ga., great sachem. S. T. Potts, of Augusta, great senior sagamore.

The time of meeting of the other lodges will remain unchanged. The various lodges are endeavoring to bring about a more fraternal spirit among themselves, as well as a closer acquaintance of the members, so that all may have greater opportunities to work together for good.

Brandt division No. 5, uniformed rank, have received the following letter:

ADOLPH BRANDT DIVISION, NO. 5 U. R. OF K. P.—SIR KNIGHT: The following arrangements have been made for the Home trip: Assemble at your armory on Monday at 3 p.m. sharp, in full-dress uniform. Have your uniform trulk ready to go to the depot. See to it in time, that your uniform is in proper condition, and that you have sufficient white gloves. At 3.45 we leave via the Western and Atlanticrailroad. Returning, we have arranged for a special car to leave Rome Wednesday at 7 p. m., reaching Atlanta that night at 10.25. It is thought that arrangements can be made for those whose business engagements require them to leave Rome at an earlier date, but all must go together, in order to get advantage of the low rates offered. It is hoped that every Sir Knight will arrange to remain with the division so as to return together.

There will be a meeting in the office of the sir knight captain in the state capitol on Saturday night, at which meeting each one is expected to bring $1.75 for his own ticket, and $2.35 for any member of his family that will go with us, or for any one not going in uniform. This addition to the regular rase fixed for the Sir Knights in uniform, is for a porter, and any other expenses of the division.

The Royal Arcanum.

The Grand Council, Royal Arcanum, meets in Columbus next Tuesday.

The delegates from Atlanta are Messrs. A. Rosenfeld, J. S. Panchon, G. S. Prior and Dr.

William King.

This will be a most important meeting of this great benevolent order, and a full board of officers will be elected for the coming year. The Royal Arcanum has been one of the successful benevolent associations in the country, and The Improved Order of Red Men.

This face is familiar to a number of friends in every town and city in Georgia, and its appearance as the chief officer of the "Improved Order of Red Men," will be greeted with pleasure by every member of the order, for there is not a more popular Red Man in Geot gia than Robert T. Daniel, great sachem of the state.

Mr. Daniel after completing his education at Emory college, Oxford, Ga., was admitted to the bar a few months after he was twenty years old. Heat once acquired a good practice, and the bar a few months after he was twenty years old. Heat once acquired a good practice, and when just twenty-two years old he was elected judge of the city court of Griffin, being the youngest man ever commissioned judge in Georgia. Judge Daniel held this position for three terms, leaving the bench to form a copartnership with Judge John D. Stewart, present congressman from the fifth district. As a lawyer, Judge Daniel ranks among the foremost of the young men of the state, as an orator and advocate, he is strong and forcible. His speeches on the subject of the "Improved Order of Red Men," have been pronounced master pieces of eloquence. In a speech delivered at Athens during the past week he captured the audience by this beautiful reference to Mr. Grady:

Athens during the past week he captured the audience by this beautiful reference to Mr. Grady:

"There was another citizen of Atlanta who was a Red Man. One who caught the spirit of the principles of the order as if by inspiration, and who lived up to the full tenets of the same In his life, he practiced the very embodiments of the laws of the order, and in his death, he verified the truth that is in them. His contact with his brother Red Men was so gentle and sweet, that when he winged his way to glory, the sun shone less bright, and the angels dimmed the brightness of the stars with tears. Around the bier of Henry Woodin Grady, We all might stand and say:
His life was gentle, and the elements So mixed in him, that nature might stand up And say to all the world, this is a true Red Man!

Judge Daniel is a man of fine executive ability, is progressive, enterprising and energetic, and it is safe to say that the Improved Order of Red Men, under his management, will have the most prosperous year in its existence.

The session of the great council at Athens, last week, was a large and enthusiastic one, and a great deal of useful legislation was enacted.

The reports of the officers shows that the order is in a most prosperous condition, and is rapidly growing.

No order in Georgia is working with more enthusiasm and zenalithan the Red Men, and the number of pale faces that have been captured during the past years has been remarkably large. This order possesses some new and interesting features, that makes it exceedingly popular, and causes its member to be very popular, and causes its member to be very devoted to its principles and untiring in their efforts in its behalf.

The great council at its last session made a new departure from orders of this kind in the south, and one that will be a vast benefit in the growth and up-building of the order. A state organizer was elected, and will be placed in the field at once, who will give his entire time and attention to the organization of new tribes, and the instruction of tribes already in existence.

By the active efforts of this officer for the coming year, the order expects to double its membership. And with the following strong set of officers, the work will be easily done: Great Sachem—Robert T. Daniel, Grifin, Georgia.

Great Senior Sagamore—S. A. Potts, Sr.

Augusta, Georgia. Great Junior Sagamore—Y. A. Wright, Jackson, Georgia. Great Prophet—C. C. Gillett, Atlanta, Geor gia. Great Chief of Records—Jacob Emmel, Atlanta, Georgia. Great Keeper of Wampum—George E. John-ston, Atlanta, Georgia. Organizer—W. H. Hofer, Jackson, Georgia.

Organizer—W. H. Hofer, Jackson, Georgia.

The Masons.

All the various lodges of the Masonic fraternity are flourishing, and the Temple company has succeeded in securing subscriptions sufficient to warrant them in purchasing a site for the temple, which will be one of the most magnificient buildings in the city.

One third of the subscription One-third of the subscriptions is to be paid over Tuesday, and those who have subscribed will respond liberally. The subscriptions are to bepaid to Treasurer J. M. English, or Mr. W. F. Parkhurst.

Stock has been taken not only among the the Masons, but by a number of persons outside the fraternity, and the Masonic Temple com-pany is one of the strongest in the state.

ROME'S AMATEURS. They Are Coming to Atlanta, and Will Draw the Crowd Thursday Night Next.

They are coming! Rome's charming circle of amateur dramatists will be in Atlanta next Thursday night, and the foot lights will beam merrily at DeGive's opera-

This company of amateurs is one that has won golden opinions and loud applanse wherever they have ever played, and that they are making especial efforts to give Atlanta their best show is sufficient to warrant for them a great crowd when they take the boards next Thursday night at DeGive's, saying nothing of the fact that they will appear for the beneft of the Atlanta Fire Department Relief association, a cause which in itself should prompt a large attendance at the play.

"Let me out and I'll build the fire." Mr. Jones has just bought one of those new Windsor Folding Beds at Rhodes & Haverty's, and he likes it so well that it's almost impossible for Mrs. Jones to get him up to breakfast. She's found, however, that the machinery works so easily that she can shut it up with a broom, and the cut shows how she does it.

The Joneses have furnished their entire house at Rhodes & Haverty's, from the hat-rack, where Mr. Jones hangs up his boots on "lodge nights," to the pretty cheap bed-room suit way up in the garret chamber.

Their parlor's a gem; and the entire set cost only $50. They had to get an extra chair so that disagreeable callers would not be too comfortable, but when they want things right they go to Rhodes & Haverty, where the best values are given for the smallest prices.

Talks to the People of the Country Through the Columns of The Constitution.

WASHINGTON, May 17 .- [Special.]-No man 1 in the United States senate stands out more inently before the country than Senator Zeb Vance of North Carolina.

He is one of the few members of that body who draws a crowd when it is announced that he is going to speak. His efforts are meaty and witty at the same time, and everyone around Washington knows that when it is announced Vance is to speak there is a treat in store for them. Indeed, with the exception of Ingalls, no one draws a larger crowd to the senate chamber.

Senator Vance is a student of men as well as measures. He is an interesting talker upon all subjects, and what he says, either in print, in the senate, or on the stump, can not be otherwise than interesting and instructive.

I found him last evening in his little office in the basement of his home on Massachusetts avenue. Upon being informed that an interview was desired he transferred his little wad of genuine North Carolina leaf to the right side of his mouth and said: "Well, fire away." I fired, and here is the result:

The South's Future. "Senator, may I ask you what are the chances of the south as to her future pros-

"The prospect for the physical prosperity of the south I consider to be hopeful and great. Let us glance for a moment at the inducements which other parts of the union have offered for the settlement of the adventurous and an influx of capital. The public lands which were open for settlement are virtually all gone in the great northwest. Certainly all those lands that are desirable are gone. The tide of immigration and the tide of investment of enterprising capital is undoubtedly flowing to-wards our section. I don't think there has ever been any period since I can remember when the prospect for material progress, the increasing value of our lands, the opening of our mines, the building up of our towns and increasing value of our lands, the railroads, the development of our resources generally and the development of our railroad systems, not forgetting the unparaleled increase in our population, was so great as it is

"Per contra, I don't remember that I have ever known-certainly not since the days of reconstruction, when our political situation was worse. The prospect for our southern, country, now particularly, is very gloomy indeed. You see the tide of popular sentiment is undoubtedly in the direction of a change toward the democracy. Protection is pretty well played out. Since the great dision of that subject in this country that began eight years ago the people have learned more of financial matters, especially the tariff For twenty years previous to the war, we had hardly any discussion of anything except the great question of slavery. Financial questions were not talked about on the stump, and the stump was the principal means of that day for educating the common people on political matters. Well, nothing was talked about on the stump in those days but the slavery question and its extension to the territories and the rights of the states, and this, that and the other. Then the war came on, and, of course, there were no financial matters talked about then, nor during the war. After the war was over there were no financial operations talked about. The absorbing topic was reconstruction. During all that time, like the little busy bee of whom the immortal Dr. Watts so interestingly sings, the protectionists lation instead of work, and taking advantage of their neighbors by means of legislative enactment, were improving the shining hours. The necessities of the war gave them the start with an evense to raise the tariff duties, and upon that plea they got them higher and higher, and they levied also, at the same time, enormous internal revenue taxes.

"Soon after the war the people of the north began to kick against the internal revenue tax on manufactures, patent medicines and bank checks and a hundred little things that they were paying axes on, and eventually these burdens taken off. Then the republican party said: Inasmuch as we have taken off this much of the internal revenue, having relieved everything in fact except tobacco and spirits, we must raise the tariff duty a little higher to make up the deficiency.' Well, they kept that thing up till they got the tariff higher than it had ever been before in the history of the country.

"By that time," continued the senator, "our folks had gotten out of the slough of recon-To some extent they had been able to get their breath and look around and to dis-cuss ways and means for the reduction of the tariff. Since that time the American people have been going to school on financial questions, and the further along the scholars get the more odious appears to them this same tariff tax and the whole system of monopolistic legislation, by which a few men accumulate a large portion of the wealth of the nation. From that day to this the protectionists have been losing ground. First, the house of representatives became democratic, then the senate, and at one time the senate and the house were at one time the senate and the house were both democratic. Then there would come little reverses and we would lose the house. Then we got the house and the presidency, but the republicans held the senate; so that we have never been able to effect any legislation in the way of re-shaping the financial policy of the country; for we never have had, at one time, both houses and the president to pass laws which would vindicate in their operation the policy of the democratic party; but now the indications are universal, so far as a politician can-judge of the signs of the times, that the majority of the American people will

oon place both the house and the presidency in the hands of the democratic party, so that these reforms could be effected if we had the

"The republican party has hurried four new states into the union in order to give them all the majority they want. But for that the senate would have been tied. Three of these states came in under the effects of a legislative gerrymander when their constitutions were formed, with republican senators. The fourth one came in with two demo-cratic senators, as undoubtedly and as authentically democratic as the two senators from Georgia. They deliberately stole these, which gave eight majority to the republican in the senate. Now they are going to bring in Idaho and Wyoming, which will give them a majority of two ve in the senate. That fixes the senate for some years to come: It will take almost a revolution to make that will take almost a revolution to make that senate democratic during the next six years. Further, in order to intrench themselves in power, and in order to secure all they want before the turn of the tide comes, they have changed the rules of the house and abolished all the methods of parliamentary law which had been practiced without a question as to their legality or propriety for one hundred years. They have turned all that over in a moment, made the speaker an autocrat and increased their majority by removing enough democrats to pass everything they want. Then they are going to put the tariff in shape—not for revenue—not for protection, but to prohibit the coming in from abroad of any importations, thus compelling every man in America to buy from American manufacturers and from nowhere else. That will insure a fortune to every man who is operating a manufacturing establishment for some years to come. That is what they are going to do, hoping thereby to perpetuate themselves in power for some years at least."

"Do you think they will enact a federal election law?"
"Yes. They are going to pass one and take charge of our federal elections, and the bill Mr. Hoar has introduced in the senate, is the most infernal peace of political machinery for the manufacture of political villainy that ever was invented in these United States. It throws reconstruction completely in the shade. It would make the ghost of Thad Stevens ashamed of himself if he could see that bill and realize what can be done under it. Everything assained of minserin he could see that of and realize what can be done under it. Everything is to be done subject to the chief supervisor of each state. He alone takes the returns of the supervisors of elections and tabulates them for the board of state canvassers, so there is no chance for supervision by even one man of the expective party.

"Senator, don't you think they are going to pass the Rowell bill, providing for a board of supervisors for each state, who shall overlook the state supervisors?"

"No, they will take the Hoar bill because that is the meanest. The other makes some little account of state authority, but in Hoar's bill the supervisors of the county stand over the box and watch every ticket put in, and, as soon as the tickets are all put in, they are handed over by the state supervisors to the supervisors of the county, who tabulate them. Instead of sending them to the state can handed over by the state supervisors to the supervisors of the county, who tabulate them. Instead of sending them to the state canvassing board, they send the returns to the supervisor through the hands of the United States deputy marshal. The chief supervisor of the district then sits down alone and tabulates the returns to suit himself. It is not provided that this shall be done in public. He tabulates the returns and sends them on to the board of canvassers. If there is any objection to a return from a precinct, they are authorized to send for the county supervisors who supervised, or watched, as they call it, and guarded the election, and hear their statement "and ascertain the facts," which means they have sudicial powers. In other words, they are created a board of state canvassers with judicial powers to determine all questions, and decide to suit themselves. What they did in Montana is what they will do elsewhere."

"Do you think the house will accept that bill?" I asked.

"Oh yes, unless some republicans will be bill?" I asked.

"Oh yes, unless some republicans will be fearful of it on the ground that it is rough on states' rights in all northern states to the same degree that it is in the south; but it is provided that there shall not be supervisors appointed for a congressional district except at the request in writing of one hundred citizens. The democrats in the north for the purpose of bringing the system to the test and making it as unpopular as possible, might petition for it. In the south the republicans could easily get a hundred negroes to petition. There is money in it. The supervisors are to be paid twenty dollars a day and expenses. The clerk to the county board is to be paid ten dollars a day and fees on every document and every statement and every certificate, and so on. You know these hungry republicans down south, how they need these fees. I am just giving you a hint of what these fellows intend to do. Having secured the senate by at least a major-Having secured the senate by at least a major-ity of twelve they will hold the hous as long as they possibly can."

"Senator, what will be the effect of the passage of that bill upon the south, and do you think it will increase the representation of the think it will increase the representation of the republicans by its passage?"

"If we had the assurance that this law would be honestly applied I don't see how it could change the representation in the south, except that the whole thing is calculated to provoke change the representation in the south, except that the whole thing is calculated to provoke disturbances at the polls under the cover of which they might have the excuse to throw out ballot boxes and precincts as they did in reconstruction times. I am not acquainted, except from hearsay, with the methods down in the negro states like South Carolina, Alabama and Louisiana, but I never believed there was any dishonesty in the counting of the votes there. I always thought that we made votes and managed to secure our congressmen in large, black districts in a legitimate manner. In South Carolina, for instance, if a negro should put his vote in the wrong box and it was thrown out, that was lawful. It has been done in many states. The South Carolina law forbids anyone present to show a man how to vote. That's just the same thing as the Massachusetts law, which required a man to read and write before he could vote. Of course, if the negro could read and write, he could see what ticket he was voting, and where he should put his ticket. The blacks being an inferior race to the white people, of course the superior influences the inferior in ways that we call fair. Nobody would expect an intelligent democrat to bring up an inversal regress and precious and totor him, and show people, of course the superior influences the inferior in ways that we call fair. Nobody would expect an intelligent democrat to bring up an ignorant negro, and tutor him, and show him how to vote a republican ticket. Well, all of these things, I say, were legitimate as we look upon politics, and I have never believed that respectable men who were appointed judges of elections in the south would deliberately lie by counting votes falsely. I believe we secure our majority in colored districts by the ignorance of our political opponents, and not by dishouesty Well, if that is so, the only effect of this bill in the south would be to encourage the ignorant negroes to come up and vote, and to see that their votes are put in the right box, and in that way they might change a few members in the south—I don't think they would change many, but they might change a few."

The Senate Will Not Adopt Reed's Bules.

The Senate Will Not Adopt Reed's Bules.

"Won't the republicans adopt Reed's rules the senate to pass this bill?"

greatly. While the rules are unchanged, if we had the physical ability to hold the floor long enough we would gain the fight; but in a filibustering fight of that sort the labor is on the part of the minority. The majority have nothing to do but to sit still and ready to vote. The minority have to be on the aggressive. They must have a man always on the floor to keep up speaking or make motions. One-fifth of the senate is required to call the ayes and noes. They cannot sleep. The other fellews might be all asleep, and the moment you got to call the roll they would come in to vote. A portion of our army would have to be on duty all the time."

"Then, senator, do you think the majority can pass this bill through the senate?"

"If our people were determined to endure the fight they would defeat it, but the chances are that it will become a law. The chances are that the federal election bill, and the bill to prevent gerrymanders, so called, will both become law."

It Will Cause Bloodshed in the South.

It Will Cause Bloodshed in the South. "Senator, don't you think it would tend to produce riots and tumult and violence at the polls?"

"Senator, don't you think it would tend to produce riots and tumult and violence at the polls?"

"That is what I said, as deputy United States marshals of as supervisors bad men would be appointed. True, they require them to read and write by the act. They are all appointed by the republicans with a few exceptions. There are many of that class in the south that our people have a large respect for generally. Of course there are a great many honest republicans in the south, but such would not be selected. They don't want honest republicans. That's the very thing that they don't want. Look at the course of John I. Davenport, in New York a few yearr ago, in selecting the very scum of Five Points as marshals and supervisors, showing you that they know what they were going for; so that the few white men in Georgia and North Carolina who are honest republicans would not be chosen for this business, and therefore the whole thing would be in the hands of the worst class of republican whites at the south, which all the decent whites have a sovereign contempt for, and if they were to come hovering over the polls giving instructions to voters and judges our respectable and liberal white men, who generally preside at the polls and whose integrity is unimpeached, would be tempted to resist it, and if theylstood it the boys would not. There would be a sudden temptation to riot and the display of force on the part of the deputy-marshals would increase the temptation. It would be like the story of the Irishman, who carried a chip on his shoulder, and walked around the crowd at a fair asking that some "gintleman would be plazed to knock off that chip."

It Would Demoralize Labor.

"Would not the passage of such a bill have

It Would Demoralize Labor "Would not the passage of such a bill have the effect of interfering materially with the negro labor of the south, and soon raise an antagonism more than now exists?"

"Oh, I don't know that it would; but I will tell you what is the fact. Our experience during the years of reconstruction shows that wherever the negroes are in the majority and have positical nower year, numbers of them.

wherever the negroes are in the majority and have political power, vast numbers of them quit work, and undertake to live by politics, either by getting office or by getting the money that the national committees distribute in every election. It demoralizes labor every day. There never was much profit on their labor in South Carolina, I know, during their reign there. After the whites got control of the state and got rid of the carpet-baggers, the negroes found that they could not live by politics, and went back to the fields. Anything which offers them an opportunity to live without work, of ceurse, demoralizes their labor, and this bill would have that affect."

labor, and this bill would have that affect."

The Race Question.

"Speaking of the negro, do you think, senator, that there is any race question at all? And if you think there is such a question can you give any idea of its solution?"

"I can't add anything to what I said in my recent speech on that subject. There is what is popularly called a race question, but it is idle to suppose that it can be settled by legislation. You cannot do so any more than you can settle by legislation any purely social question. You cannot decide and settle by law when a young man shall come to his neighbor's house and see his daughter, if he has one, or whether he should take her to the theatre, or whether she shall wear a straw bonnet or a whether he should take her to the theatre, or whether he should take her to the theatre, or whether she shall wear a straw bonnet or a silk one: You cannot settle such questions politically. They are purely social.

"There are only two ways in which the negroes compete with the whites—that is politically and socially. Of course they cannot associate with the whites. They deny that they desire it. One thing is absolutely certain; the white man is not going to submit to the domination of the negro. There is not law enough within the imaginations of the lineal descendants of Moses to force it. There isn't power enough in the army and navy of the United States to enforce it. Take a state like South Carolina, for instance. If the whites were placed in a minority by the laws of the United States and held there by the power of the United States, they would help themselves in every possible way. If there was no other way they would pull up stakes and abandon their state. A community of white people cannot live under African domination. There's no use talking way. If there was no other way they would pull up stakes and abandon their state. A community of white people cannot live under African domination. There's no use talking about it. Therefore, the only solution to the race question that I see as possible is for the government to let the parties concerned alone. Of course the republicans can start the discussion whenever they see proper; and when they get a little scared by looking at the tariff bill, and find that they cannot persuade the Kansas farmer to submit to 100 per cent duty on his salt and 48 per cent on his iron, while he is burning his corn for fuel, they begin to talk about the "nigger" and southern domination over the negro race. I think it is not the policy of the southern men to provoke this discussion, neither do I think they ought to shrink from it when it is brought up. I think if they were let alone, and there was no possible interference at all, that there is every disposition of humanity, aided by the old-fashioned love for the black race among the people of the south today, to do them justice and to place them in a position to obtain the fullest civilization that their race is capable of. I have no doubt of it. Every southern man knows that deep down in the bottom of our hearts we all like the nigger. I can heartily express myself on the subject. I like them exceedingly in every position of can heartily express myself on the subject. I like them exceedingly in every position of life, except as mrulers and social equals. And if he was my superior and had more sense and capacity to rule than I have I would gladly make him my ruler; but he is my inferior and he has demonstrated his unfitness for rule ever since the foundation of the world. for rule ever since the foundation of the world for rule ever since the foundation of the world, to the present time. He started out with the same chances as the white man. He has not improved them. His best condition of life has been in slavery and in close contact with highly civilized masters. Left to himself I do not think there is any doubt Lett to himself I do not think there is any doubt in the world that the history of the negroes here would be that of San Domingo. I think they would relapse towards barbarism instead of climbing towards the higher plane of civilization which the whites have attained.

"You cannot recollect the time," continued climbing towards the higher plane of civilization which the whites have attained.

"You cannot recollect the time," continued the senator, "because you are too young a man, but I can, when a young white boy would fight for his negro boy just as fiercely as he would for his brother, and when it was almost worth another white boy's life to lay his hands on his "nigger." That sentiment of protection existed because he was his owner, and because of the love which had arisen between the two from their constant association. There is not an old planter now anywhere in the south but who has a kindly feeling for his late slaves. In addition to that kindly feeling, which is at the bottom of all our hearts, the old planters of the south have philosophy and statesmanship enough to comprehend that we must do something for the negro. It won't do, and they know it won't do, to invest him with all the outward habiliments of a free man, and with all the political power of full citizenship, and not make him fit for the exercise of that citizenship and of those powers, if possible. If we have to have the negroes forever amongst us, invested with the rights of citizenship, we want to teach them as much of the duties of citizenship as we can and aid them in the proper exercise thereof: I verily believe as I am a Christian, thatif there was no outside interference, and our sectional jealousy and bitterness was not aroused by the constant interposition of yankee advice and yankee laws between us and our colored people, in the process of time this thing would adjust itself harmoniously, and, notwithstanding what is constantly said to the effect that an inferior race cannot live on terms of political equality with a superior race, I believe that we could. I believe that the negroes would become attached to the white people as they used to be. I believe that the negroes would become attached to the soii. I believe they would become attached to the soii. I believe they would soon learn to consult the best interests.

of their employers, and that both would move in harmony with no more friction than there was between English landlords and their ten ants belonging to the same race. The class distinction there is between the people of the same race, and is quite as marked as between the whites and colored people here."

"The Administration.

"Senator, how does this administration contrast with that of Mr. Cleveland? Don't you think the present administration has made a great many errors?"

"I think the whole thing was an error from the beginning," said Mr. Vance, with dry sarcasm, "for that matter, and the error of the whole policy is exceedingly obvious to me; but, looking at it from their stand-point, I don't think they have made many errors."

"What do you think of President Harrison?"

"Well, Harrison is not a great man. He does not take a very comprehensive view of things and he is not very magnanimous; but within the scope of his consideration I think President Harrison is a very upright and reputable man. I always thoughtso when I served in the senate with him. He does not consciously do wrong. It is true that he has officially endorsed some pretty tolerable hard wads. It is true that some of his appointments have not been desirable; but the man who is elevated to the presidency or any other position by the public vote cannot altogether ignore such agencies after his election as assisted him in the election. It is just impossible. There are a thousand doubtful things done during a man's election by his friends of which, perhaps, he knows nothing at the time. After he is elected it is a little too much to expect him to shelve a friend whose conduct was not exactly straight in his election, or slap him in the face, or denounce him for a scouudrel. I think while Harrison has made some mistakes, his course has been an upright one, according to his view of things."

"Senator, how do you think he ranks in comnarison with other presidents?"

"Senator, how do you think he ranks in comparison with other presidents?"
"Well, of course you mean modern presidents. Intellectually I should say he was inferior to Garfield, but superior—far superior to Hayes and to Grant. I am speaking more particularly in the leaf of the course ticularly in a political sense. Superior, intel-lectually, to Arthur; though I had a very high opinion of Mr. Arthur, not as a great man, but as a courteous gentleman, and level-headed roliticin; "

The Future of the Democratic Party.

"And now, senator, what do you think of the future of the democratic party?"

"Well, I don't see but one little cloud on the horizon. I think it is by far the greatest party that has ever existed in American politics, and that it has more vitality and more power of endurance and persistence than any party that we have ever had, for the simple reason that it has stuck inside of the strict letter of the constitution, the bond of the union. As no religious sect ever flourished at any time in our country that was not founded on the strict letter of the word of God, so no political party that is not founded strictly on the letter of the constitution will stand success fully in our politics. There is only one little cloud ter of the word of God, so no political party that is not founded strictly on the letter of the constitution will stand success fully in our politics. There is only one little cloud upon our horizon, and that is the interference with our party organization that may be effected by these farmers' movements. The farmers have suffered from our financial policy so long and so greatly that, having turned now and begun to struggle for their rights, the fear is that they will strike about them rather blindly and hit the party that has been their friend all the time as well as their enemies. The financial policy of the democratic party has all the time been favorable to the farmer. It is the God's truth that all these evils under which the farmers have suffered and groaned have arisen from the policy of the republican party. It has compelled them to sell their surplus products in the cheapest market in the world. They have so hedged our country about with a protective tariff that the farmer now cannot sell his bacon, wheat or beef in Europe because Europe cannot sell us anything in exchange for them, and, therefore, he is burning his corn instead of feeding it to hogs and sending his bacon abroad. The same thing would have taken place with our cotton but for the fact that the God of nature has given us a sort of monopoly in the crop. So far as England could she has fostered the growth of cotton elsewhere with the view to relieve herself of her dependance on the southern cotton fields, and she is now getting the bulk of her wheat from India, Australiajand New Zealand, and she is getting all her wool from Australia; and whenever she can, by bulding railroads and stimulating native production get her supplies of cotton from India, there is no telling what on the face of the earth will become of the southern people. The policy of the republican party has been to destroy, so far as it could, the profits of cotton growing in the south, just as it has destroyed the profits on corn and wheat in the west. Now when a man has been

Now when a man has been driven to desperation, as has the farmer, and gets a chance to redress his wrongs he don't look at things as nicely as the lord chancellor or lay down his rules and regulations according to the strict square. He hits back and retaliates on those who have oppressed him. He strikes blindly at everybody that is in his way and like a man on the court green who is spoiling for a fight, he will strike one of his friends rather than not have a fight at all; and now on the eve of a congressional election when we need the utmost unanimity in the democratic party, I am very much afraid that the alliance people will damage the party. I don't know how it is in your country, but I suppose it is the same will damage the party. I don't know how it is in your country, but I suppose it is the same as it is in North Carolina. The men who are in these alliances are just the best men and demo-crats in our state, and I hope there are men of consideration among them, who will see that they don't do their friends a damage in trying to defeat their enemies, and punish them for the injuries they have suffered from so long."

Now when a man has been driven to despera-

The Next Campaign. "What do you think will be the issues in the next campaign?"
"Well, politics are a little like the weather—it is fair today, and you can go out and make your arrangements to do several jobs out of doors, but before sun-down you are running in from a storm. You cannot tell. The question should be tariff reform principally, and the free coinage of silver and the control of trusts, monopolies and things of that sort, pertaining to the financial policy of the country."

"Don't you think the race question a congressional issue?"

gressional issue?"
"No, I don't think they will attempt to pass any law that will strike the race issue, except any law that will strike the race issue, except the federal election law. They will attempt nothing like the civil rights bill, or anything like that again. The race question cannot come up in the next campaign assume the come up in the next campaign except collater

Cleveland and Hill.

"Now, who do you think is the man that stands in the democratic party today at the head of it, or who do you think the democratic will center on as their next president—do you think it will be Cleveland?"

"I cannot answer that, not because I am indisposed to, but simply because what I would say to you would not be worth anything on that point. Mr. Cleveland and Governor Hill have so disturbed the harmony of New York that point. Mr. Cleveland and Governor Hill have so disturbed the harmony of New York that I think the policy of the party will be to go elsewhere for the next candidate. I think so, though I cannot say what is the real sentiment among the most of the people in New York. These factions between Hill and Cleveland may be only between leading friends. The great mass of the people may not care anything about it. A great many politicians in in New York have told me that any acceptable outsider can get a larger vote in New York than any citizen of the state."

A Fire-Fiv in the Evening Sky.

A Fire-Fly in the Evening Sky.

"He would stand very prominet; so would Governor Palmer, of Illinois. He is a very popular man in my country."

"Don't you think Mr. Campbell is coming to the front very rapidly?"

"Well, of course, a democrat carrying a republican state naturally attracts a great deal of attention, and our people are very apt to think there is a star of the first magnitude rising in the heavens, when there may only be a fire-fly in the evening sky, and you get fooled. I am not well acquainted with Campbell. I saw but little of him when he was hefe a member of congress. If he has the stuff in him he can make himself very prominent. He certainly has abundance of common-sense, and his reputation for personal integrity is first-rate. Should he be able to carry Ohio for governor next time, I should say, like Proctor Knot,'s peaceable man, fie would prove 'rather an onconvenient fellow to project with' as a candidate for the presidency."

YOUNG ATLANTIANS IN FRONT

The City's Success Is Due to the Young Men,

And Here Are Some Who Have Helped Bring It Out.

Atlanta is essentially a city of young men. The Atlanta push and energy, of which we are all so proud, is essentially the result of the coming of the young man to the fore.

Everywhere you see it, in every work of life you find the young man at the front. It is he who is the active, energetic worker. It is he who always keeps abreast of the advance movements of the world. Give him half a chance and you'll find him reaching for, if not already on the top rung of the ladder which leads to success.

Atlanta is like Chicago in this respect, and it is probably to this particular influence, more than any other, that her reputation as the hustling, busy Chicago of the south is due. Everybody admires Chicago, and Chicago's grit is proverbial. So it is with Atlanta.

To a visitor to Chicago, the most noticeable fact is that on the 'changes, in the banks, in the great business houses of all kinds-everywhere, the men who "run things" are the young men. It is said that a man retires there when he reaches the ripe age of thirtyfive, an exaggeration, no doubt, but one which serves to show the true state of affairs. Of Atlanta the same statement might be made and it would be just as near the

It would be impossible within the limits of a newspaper article to give any sort of notice of all the young men who are in business for themselves or who hold positions of great trust. A simple list of their names would fill an ordinary newspaper. But on looking over the city I find a few who are, it seems to me, fair samples of Atlanta's representative young business men and whose career show what energy and perseverance can accomplish when they have a basis of brains to work upon.

There's Martin Amorous. It hasn't been many years since Martin was a bare-footed boy selling lumber for Anthony Murphy. He was bright and intelligent as a lad, and soon held an important position with Mr. Murphy. He learned his business thoroughly, and then he began F. AMOROUS. making a special study lumber resources of Georgia

He knew there was money, and big money, to be made out of the Georgia timber-lands, and he determined to have some He started in business for himself, first as a selling agent for several mil's. This was in 1883. All this time he kept on talking lumber, and the result was he was one of the leading spirits of the Atlanta Lumber company, which was formed two years later. He was unanimously chosen general manager of the new company, a position he holds today.

The company has been very successful, and in addition to the big salary his position gives him, Mr. Amorous has profited by that success, for he is one of the heavy stockholders. He is regarded as authority on all matters pertaining to the lumber interests, and has done much to bring the great resources of Georgia to the notice of the capitalists of the east and the west. So Martin Amorous certainly deserves a place in this list

Next-we take the list alphabetically-comes Henry M. Atkinson.

If there is any man of his years, who has done more for Atlanta than Henry M. Atkinson, I don't know who he is. Few men of maturer years, indeed, have done so much. Although he has made this city his home for only a few years, he has come to the front in financial circles, and enjoys the distinction of having brought to Atlanta for investment H. M. ATKINSON. nearly half a million dollars. That seems almost impossible, but it is a fact. A member of one of the most prominent and most influential Boston families, he came to Atlanta several years ago to make his home here. For a time he home here. For a time with S. M. Inman & Co., then he and Mr. George R. DeSaussure formed a partnership for the purpose of entering into the insurance, real estate and loan business. They established in February, 1889, the Home Loan and Building company, but this year the capital stock was increased to $300,000, and the name changed to the Southern Banking and Trust company. Almost all of this capi tal stock is furnished by Boston capitalists. It is in interesting these gentlemen in At-lanta—and they are the wealthiest and most prominent men of the east-that Mr. Atkinson has done a great work. Half a dozen or more of the leading banks and three or four of the leading trust companies of Boston have, through Mr. Atkinson's influence, became interested in Atlanta. They have made investments other than with this new banking company, and in a number of ways they are interested in Atlanta's growth and prosperity. Isn't that a good record for a man only twenty-five years of age?

Now the third.

Thomas H. Austin. Everybody in Atlanta knows Tom Austin. He is one of the youngest of all the young men but he is one of the best business men and one of the most successful.

A hustler in all that the word can be taken ness, Tom Austin has, within three years, worked his way from the position of book-keeper and office man to Mr. Harle, to the head of a firm making thousands of dollars each year. mance here, but the story of cess is almost marvelous. It wasn'it very many years ago—all old citizens and many of the younger ones will remember it — Johnnie Falvey was a little redheaded urchin driving a hack. He worked hard, and you may be sure was a good hackdriver. During those days, though only a boy, he was the support of his mother and sisters. All those years he sent his sisters to school, which is the sach a good some times to make both ends meet, he came through it all with flying colors.

Then he branched out and went into the grocery business. It was on a small scale at first, but nobody knew better than he how to work, and he worked hard. It was a cardinal principle of his business life to be just and true, and he couldn't help being honorable—that's his nature. And so it was when he found his business increasing and was able to devote his time to the fruit. He has prospered, and he has deserved it. Today his business is one of the largest of its kind in the south, and and what he doesn't know about that business is not worth trying to find out.

Dollars come into him as fast as pennies once did, and anybody who knows him is glad that it is so.

A younn man is at the head of the great J. M. High & Co. concern—Joe High.

Mr. High acme to Atlanta from Madison in April, 1880. He had made a small beginning in Madison, but concluded he required a wider field and came to Atlanta, opening at 46 Whitehall. A comparison of his business then and now shows about $60,000 as the total for the first year in Atlanta as against $750,000 last year. Some time ago THE CONSTITUTION told of the new building which he expects to erect in the near future. This will be one of the finest in the southern states! Why, indeed.
Two young men who stand well to the front in the book busines. come next on the list, but only

Johnny worked along with his Atlanta papers, and then added some outside ones to his list, delivering them to subscribers in all parts of the city. His business grew and he set up a little corner news-stand. From that stand grew the big business done by the opera-house book-store. And a big one it is, too. Today John Miller sticks to his business as closely and works as hard as he ever did as closely and works as hard as he ever did, and he is adding daily to his goodly store of

He does all his own buying, and is as well known in New York business circles as in Atlanta. No man deserves a higher place in the roll of Atlanta men who have won successful and his have won success, for he is successful, and his success is due to his own earnest endeavor.

Judge Thomas G. Lawson and Colonel F. H. Colley met in joint debate there today at 1:30 p. m. The speaking occurred at the Rut-ledge academy and about two hundred and

Judge Lawson spoke about an hour, giving his views upon the tariff, railroad combinations and trusts, also stated his reasons for having voted against the Olive bill and stating his position most clearly upon these questions. He then propounded twelve questions to Colonel Colley for him to answer in his speech following himself. Colonel Colley arose amid loud applause, and spoke about one hour and twenty minutes, assailing Judge Lawson's war record, his tariff views and his views upon railroad his tariff views and his views upon railroad combinations, saying that the judge was a monopolist on all questions. Judge Lawson then followed in a telling twenty-minutes' speech, which did himself honor.

Lawson will doubtlessly carry Morgan county, but will have strong opposition in the person of Colley. Rutledge is decidedly for Colley, but Madison and vicinity is for Lawson.

JIM DAVIS SHOOTS A NEGRO. A Difficulty Arises in a Macon Bar and the Pistol is Used.

Macon, Ga., May 17.—[Special.]—At about 1 o'clock today a difficulty occurred in the Wall street bar in which a negro named Will King was shot by Mr. James H. Davis, a young white man well known in this city, and highly connected throughout this section. King was waiting well known inthis city, and highly connected throuhgout this section. King was waiting on Davis and others in a room in the building, when the difficulty arose, and both raised chairs.

They were separated, and both left. In the difficulty Davis drew a pistol, but this was taken from him. He promised to attempt no further violence, and the pistol was given back to him. He afterwards went to a room where the negro had gone and knocked.

Davis was carried to the barracks by the police and the negro got in a carriage and was driven to a physician. It is not thought the wound will prove serious.

Savannah's Rival Railroad Interests.

Savannah, Ga., May 17.—[Special.]—McTighe & Co., the contractors who are building the line from Macon to Birmingham for the company, will undoubtedly get the contract to build. They have 100 miles of the road completed west from Macon, and are making good headway. It is accepted by those who are near the inside, that the Central will build a parallel line. The New York capitalists who own the Central have been discussing the situation for several days. They cannot well afford to allow a rival company to occupy alone the splendid territory between the Central's main stem and the Eden extension. In the widest point these two roads are sixty miles apart. This new line of the Georgia Southern and Florida will split the angle made by the Central on the north, and the Eden extension on the south, and will have a territory of thirty miles on either side of it without a railroad, until some new one is run out there. The Central has a small force at work away out on the end of the Savannah's Rival Railroad Interests. new one is run out there. The Central has a small force at work away out on the end of the old Savannah, Dublin and Western line, twenty miles beyond the Ogeeche. Colonel Machen has a half dozen men at work near the Ogeechee, but for some reason he is not considered "in it" present. The Sparks people kay that they are neither belying nor selling, and they have no hesitation in saying that Colonel Machen will in the end be found co-operating with the Central.

PIEDMONT EXPOSITION.

A Red-Letter Day for the Directors and Things were lively with exposition men

The officers had their hands full. Applications for space, bids for privileges and letters from exhibitors poured in by the score, and Secretary Arnold was as busy as a bee all day. Balloonists, racing men, farmers and exhibitors of every kind were applying for space, and things began to look like the exposition was ready to throw wide its gates and welcome the crowds already. Never was there such a rush for space so early in the year.

The Jewell brothers will come.
Who does not remember the Jewell brothers, the fellows who charmed the multitude of Georgians at the Piedmont exposition with their dizzy journeys into sky-land? They will be here again, and will bring with them the greatest balloon show ever seen in the south, giving balloon races and double leaps from parachutes, two ascensions being made and two leaps accomplished at the same time.

They will also give a Japanese balloon exhibition, consisting in a balloon ascension, with little ballons of every description and variegated colors thrown from the air-ship as it ascends. This exhibition is the latest thing out in this line and the exposition management will not let it pass. Agricultural Displays.

Morgan county made closing arrangements for fifteen hundred square feet yester-day. Morgan county is one of Georgia's best counties, and was among the first to enter its wonderful resources at the exposition its wonderful resources at the exposition grounds.

With the space given out yesterday, all the agricultural exhibition room has been let with the exception of about eight hundred square feet. Nine counties have entered.

A letter was received from the Farmers' association, Farmers' Alliance and the fair association of Siles county, Tennessee, yesterday, stating that they had all joined to bring a grand exhibit of agricultural products to the exposition. They write that it would be rather hard for them to enter singly against the strong associations and counties of Georgia, hence their combine. The management has arranged space for them in the main building, as they are the only associations outside of Georgia that have entered for agricultural exhibits.

Secretary Arnold is in correspondence with the president of the South Carolina alliance, and has about perfected arrangements for a great display from the palmetto state in Wheat Street.

Call at my new factory, No. 100 Wheat street, and inspect my stock of pleasure wehicles before buying elsewhere. I sell only hand-made work, made in my own factory, where only the best material is used. By buying from me, a manufacturer, you save not only the freight, but also the profits of the dealers, who handle northern and western work. I will gladly show any one through my factory, so they can see the work in all its stages of construction; see the kind of material I use; also, how it is used. I make a specialty of Victorias, Cabriolets, T Carts and Landaus. Have just finished one of my beautiful Victorias; nothing prettier or more stylish was ever seen upon the streets of Atlanta. Any gentleman desiring to give his wife the most elegant present imaginable would do well to call and see this. I have two very fine T carts which are nearing completion. Any one wishing to get a handsome T cart could get one of these finished up as they pleased in the way of painting and triuming. MR. BYNUM ON THE FLOOR. However, as soon as it was concluded, Mr. By-num calmly took the floor and denounced the statement of Campbell as a liar and perjurer, and as the gentleman from Pennsylvania had shouldered the remarks, he would now say that the same would apply to Mr. Bayne, and added that: "Campbell's character is as good as the man who assails me."

At this, the whole republican side was on its feet to protest, but the voice of Mr. Cutcheon, of Michigan, demanding that the words be taken down, were heard above it all. Then when Cutcheon offered a resolution to have Mr. Bynum carried before the bar of the house and there censured by the speaker for violating the there censured by the speaker for violating the rules of the house, there was such excitement as was never before witnessed in the house. Every man on both sides was up on his feet. Everybody yelled and everybody shook their fists at somebody else. The entire house simply went wild for fully fifteen minutes.

THE TRUTH COMES OUT.

Then when quiet as restored, the democrats filibustered for two hours, but Tom Reed cut them off, and the previous question being ordered, forty minutes debate was allowed and then it was that the true object of the republicans in desiring to censure Bynum without censuring Bayne was shown up. Cutcheon, in explaining why he had introduced the resolution, said that this was not Bynum's first offense of discourtesy to the house, which was plain evidence of the fact that the republicans were desirous of censuring him because he had denounced Reed's gag rules as damnable. Reed was engineering the entire proceedings of tonight. He wanted to retaliate upon Bynum, but the whole business ended in a roaring farce. While the republicans, by a strictly party vote, passed their reso-Intion, the entire democratic party marched up to the bar of the house with Bynum, and all alike received the censure, which was simply an announcement by Reed that "in accordance with the resolution, the speaker imposes upor you the censure of the house."

BYNUM'S GRIT. As Bynum replied: "And I accept that as a compliment," the applause that went up from the democrats was simply deafening. They tried to raise Bynum on their shoulders, but the Indianian was too heavy. The censure was a farce. Bynum is the hero of the demo-

But the matter is not yet ended. The republicans, lead by Tom Reed, showed their partisany and unfairness by not censuring Bayne also, if any censuring was in order. Monday, Mr. Wilson, of West Virginia will take the floor, and then Rome will howl. The under dog in the fight Is now Bayne, of Pennsylvania, who stands under the charge of being a liar and a perjurer, and there's no telling where he will be when Wilson is through with him on Monday. However, there will be no fight nor duel Bayne is not a fighter.

THE DEBATE IN FULL. Here is the debate in full:

Mr. Bayne, of Pennsylvania, speaking to the verbal amendment, sent to the clerk's desk and had read a letter from James Camp bell, of Pittsburg, Pa., denying statements re-flecting upon his character, made a few days since by Messrs. Bynum, of Indiana, and Wil-son, of West Virginia. In his letter he strongly attacks those gentlemen, and uses vigorous language in denunciation. Mr. Springer said that the letter was unworthy of being put on the records of the house, and unworthy of the gentleman who Thad presented it. Mr. Wheeler, of Alabama, made the point of order that the letter should be stricken from the record. The chair ruled that the gentleman who presented the letter was responsible for it.

Mr. Bynum then claimed recognition on a question of personal privilege, relating to the EXCITEMENT IN THE HOUSE.

Then ensued a scene of uproar. Mr. Bymum endeavored t proceed, but he was shouted down by the republican side.

Mr. Bayne added to the confusion by exclaiming, at the top of his voice, that a gentle-man for whom he had the highest respect had been charged with forgery and he wanted to present the letter in his defense.

Mr. Breckinridge shouted out to the chairman that it was not fair to silence a man who had been publicly attacked and let a man speak who had made himself sponser of a slanderer and stood in the shoes of the slanderer.

MR. BYNUM DENOUNCED BAYNE. After half an hour of uproar Mr. By-num secured the floor amid compar-ative quiet, and said that the Campbell affidavit was to the effect that Mr. Wilson and he had said that fifteen dollars a month was enough for any glass-blower. In his district, where he was known, the affidavit had not been circulated, but it had been circulated in Mr. Wilson's district. He had telegraphed to the West Virginia papers denouncing Camp-bell as a liar and a perjurer, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania constituted himself the sewer through which this attack of Campbell made its way into the Record.

Mr. Cheadle, of Indiana, made the point of order that the language was out of order.

The chair thought that the word "sewer," in this connection, was hardly parliamentary

RESOLUTIONS OF CENSURE.

Mr. Cutcheon then offered the following: Resolved, That a member from Indiana, Mr. William D. Bynum, in language used by him in committee of the whole, and taken down and reported to the house, and read at the clerk's desk has been guilty of a violation of the rules and privileges of the house and merits the censure of the house for the same. he house for the same. Resolved, That said William D. Bynum be now brought to the bar of the house by the sergeant at-arms and the censure of the house be adminstered by the speaker. Mr. Cutcheon demanded the previous queson, amid suggestions of "gag-law" from the nocratic side Mr. Springer made the points of order that the speaker must decide that the language was not unparliamentary. Both were overruled. From the decision on the latter Mr. Springer appealed and the appeal was tabled-24 to 98. A motion to adjourn was lost-92 to 118.

Mr. Cutcheon then demanded the yeas and nays on his demand for the previous question; and as he did so, Mr. Springer rose with a mo-tion to refer the resolution to the committee on rules, with certain instructions. The speaker, ignoring Mr. Springer's motion, declared the yeas and nays ordered.

SPRINGER CORRECTS THE SPRAKER. Mr. Springer protested, saying that the speaker had heard his motion, and that he eed not pretend that he had not. Mr. McMillin called attention to the fact that the yeas and nays on the previous question had not been ordered.

The speaker thereupon recognized Mr. Springer, who moved to refer the resolution to the committee on rules, with instructions to inquire whether the language used by Mr. Bynum was out of order, and whether there was not sufficient justification for its use.

Mr. Henderson, of Iowa, made a point of order against the motion, and the point being sustained by the speaker, Mr. Springer ap moved to reconsider. The speaker declined to recognize the motion declaring it to be dilatory.

Then another scene of confusion, Mr. Bland declaring the speaker was trampling on the rules of the house. The confusion, however, was only temporary. Mr. Cutcheon contended that the gentleman from Indiana had violated al! parliamentary usage by making a direct and personal attack on the gentleman from Pennsylvania. The question was whether it was parliamentary for one member substantially to denounce another as a liar and perjurer. He did not believe any member could afford to say that it was not a violation of the rules of the The time had come (in view of the language heretofore used by the gentleman from Indiana), that a line should be drawn where Indiana), that a line should be drawn where parliamentary proceedings ceased, and vioiation of rules of the house began.

Mr. Herbert, of Alabama, said the gentleman from Pennsylvania had been the aggressor. He had brought in a letter containing a malignant attack against the gentlemen from Indiana and West Virginia. The letter had only been ruled legitimate on the idea that the gentleman from Pennsylvania was the father of that letter and that he was making an attack which justified anything that had been said by the gentleman from Indiana. [Democratic applause.] As judge in this case, he believed the gentleman from Indiana was bound to resent the insult. [Applause.] The provocation came from the other side, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania, of the majority, was to go scot free, and the gentleman of the minority was to be censured for doing what he was forced to do by the circumstances of the case. [Applause.]

Mr. Springer said that the majority in adopting that resolution would set a precedent which would not redound to its benefit. The language of the gentleman from Indiana was inverifiable if not realismenters.

which would not redound to its benefit. The language of the gentleman from Indiana was justifiable, if not parliamentary. The gentleman from Michigan, (Mr. Cutcheon), thought Mr. Bynum ought to be censured, not only for this language, but for language he had used at the time he denounced the speaker of the house. [Democratic applause.] The gentleman from Pennsylvania adopted the language of the letter that two of the members of the house were not honorable men. At the end of the letter was an insult to the democratic party, as it said in reference to that party that it showed "the contemptible methods of the men, their intentions and party." The gentlemen might, if they desired, approve of such language, but let him see any man rise to apply the language.

[Applause.]

MR. MILLS SPEAKS.

Mr. Mills, of Texas, said that the house seemed to be determined to supply with speed what it lacked in patience. He could not say anything which would deprive the majority of the pleasure of punishing Mr. Bynum for past offenses when he had denounced the tyranical and despotic orders of the speaker who had trampled on all the rules of parliamentary law. The gentleman from Michigan, who was a public prosecutor, who was the right bower of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, had himself insulted two of the best men in the house. He had said the other day that he would believe Campbell as quickly as he would either one of these gentlemen. The gentleman from Pennsylvania had given the first offense. Not only that, but for the first time in the history of the country (and he hoped the last) a member of the house of representatives had made himself a vehicle for bringing a scurrilous, insulting and offensive letter into the house and putting it on the record, and when he encountered the manly and chivalrous defense of the gentleman he had attacked, he cried like a baby. [Democratic applause.] He (Mills) had no hope on earth that the majority would do anything except punish. Bynum, because that was the only way it could wreck its record. [Democratic applause.] The majority had not torgotten that Bynum had characterized the action of the speaker as it deserved to be characterized, and it was for that that the gentleman from Michigan was made the public prosecutor in the name of the honor and dignity of the house. [Dmecratic pplause and republican hisses.]

Mr. Clarke, of Alabama, said that the gentleman from Michigan (Cutcheon) had used language to the effect that Bynum and Wilson would not be believed by a jury, and now he rose to move censure on the gentleman from Indiana.

THE EMPEROR'S RECENT SPEECH.

Indiana.

Mr. Outhwaite, of Ohio, appealed to the republican side that it was acting in the capacity of judge. He looked on the faces of members on that side and saw written upon them anything but calm expression. If in this mood they should vote censure it would not be considered censure by the people of the country.

Then Mr. Bynum, leaning on the arm of Mr. Holman, of Indiana, appeared at the bar, accompanied by all of his democratic associates who could find room in the limited space, and who were loud in their applause.

bers to take seats, and the democrats again refused to comply.

The speaker then said, calmly:
The house of representatives perceive that it is impossible for the chair to enforce order on account of the action of certain members. The chair will therefore proceed to do its duty under the present condition of disorder.

Mr. William D. Bynum, you are arraigned at the bar of the house for having transgressed its rules by your remarks. For this offense the house desires that you should be censured at its bar. In the name of the house, therefore, I pronounce upon you its censure. The sargeant-at-arms will now release you.

MR. BYNUM'S RESFONSE.

MR. BYNUM'S RESPONSE. MR. BYNUM'S RESPONSE.

Mr. Bynum—Under such circumstances, I accept the censure of the house as a decoration of honor. [Democratic applause.]

There was some disposition manifested by the republicans to take umbrage at this remark, but before it was understood perfectly, the house, at 10:30, adjourned.

Thus ended one of the most exciting incidents of the session.

MONTGOMERY, ALA., May 17 .- Interest in the democratic state convention which meets May 28th is intense. There are five candidates -one of them, Agricultural Commissioner Kialb, is considered to be the alliance candidate.

It is difficult to forecast the result. Mr. Kolb is the strongesi single candidate, but the combined strength of the other four is considerably more than his. In the second con-gressional district, Hon. H. A. Herbert's re-

Montgomery and Crenshaw counties have instructed for him, and three others are solid for him. In the third district, one or two counties have instructed for William C. A number of counties have instructed for Bankhead. In the fifth district so far Congressman Cobb has no opposition. Congressman Turpin has a walkover in the fourth and Congressmen Clark and Wheeler in the first and eighth, and there is no opposition yet to Congressman Forney in the seventh.

Topeka, Kans., May 17.—For the first time in five years intoxicating liquors are being sold openly in Topeka. Charles Bahrer, agent for a leading Kansas City wholesale liquor house, yesterday opened up an "original package" shop at 417 Kansas avenue, the principal street of the city. His stock consisted of a carload of beer in cases containing twenty-four bottles each. Before evening the entire stock had been disposed of. Nothing less than a case was sold in any instance. The unusual sight of intoxicating liquors attracted many people to the "original package" shop, and the sidewalk in front of the place was crowded all day by people who were curious to see how all day by people who were curious to see how it was done. Bahrer says he has no fear of the state law, and will hereafter deal in original packages of whisky and wine as well as beer A TEST CASE.

Louisviller, Ky., May 17.—At the joint meeting of the legislature today Senator Lindsay placed John G. Carlisle in nomination in a brief speech of admirable taste, in which he paid a graceful tribute to the choice of the democratic caucus. Mr. Langley, for the republican caucus, nominated Silas Adams, representative from Casey county. The ballot then proceeded, 107 votes being cast for Carlisle and 15 votes for Adams. Senator Carlisle left for Washington tonight. He will not present his credentials to the senate till after the vote on the tariff bill in the house.

The Sun's Cotton Review.

NEW YORK, May 17.—Futures opened a little halting, but the "corner" idea got hold of the market, and options for May, June and July bemarket, and options for May, June and July be-came quite buoyant. August responded partially, rising to 12 cents and winning a large number of bets for the bulls. The next crop was weak and neglected, although crop accounts are by no means first-rate, and the weather today, though clear, was quite cool. The bulls are quite sure that July options will bring 12½c on a bulge. Cotton on spot was fairly active for home consumption, and prices advanced 1-16 cent.

The latter escaped, pursued by the maniac until he got entangled in a barb-wire fence. The maniac is at large with his ax, and the neighborhood is terror-stricken.

New Chancellor Makes a Go Impression on the Reichstag— A Talk With Bismarck.

Berlin, May 17.—[Copyright 1890 by the New York Associated Press.]—Short as the emperor's utterances at Konigsberg were, they smideed to irritate the Russian government and dispel all delusions regarding the possibility of a renewal of the entente with Russia.

Newspapers here minimized the references to war in the speech of Wednesday, by treating them as mere obiter dicta, without special bearing upon Russia. Yesterday his final utterances when leaving, contained an allusion which it is impossible to misunderstand. "I shall not allow, said the emperor, "my provinces here in the east to be touched. Those attacking them will find that my strength is that of rock." As Ruesia is the only possible frontier assailant of East Prussia, his words, especially in view of their following his first aggressive declaration, are now interpreted here, as in St. Petersburg, as aimed against Russia. The Svet treats them as a direct and unprovoked threat. The Grashdanin urges the czar's ministers to consider whether the speech is consonant with further arrangements to receive the czar's ministers to consider whether the speech is consonant with further arrangements to receive Emperor William at Krasnoe Selo. The Novoe Vremya holds that the words of the emperor overstepped proper bounds, and ought to be officially noticed. Within official circles here the emperor's divulgence caused no surprise, as advices pounted to closer relations between the French and Russian foreign officials.

Whatever may be the czar's opinion of the value of a French alliance, the czar's advisers cultivate it. His uncle, the Grand Duke Nicholas, left Paris last evening, after a prolonged stay, during which he responded to the assiduous/courting of Ribot, minister of foreign affairs, and other officials with eager cordiality. The grand duke's last act before leaving France was to wire effusive regrets to the admiral commanding the French Mediterranean squadron over the death of Admiral Petit Proudo. Some time ago the late admiral was a guest on board a Russian war ship when the grand duke tested the navies of France and Russia.

TO STRENGTHEN THE FRONTIER.

Another pregnant fact is Chancellor von Caprivis announced design to place one of the two new army corps on the Russian frontier. The emperor did not without, forethought say yester-days between the change of the control of the cont emperor did not without; forethought say jester-day that if obliged to draw the sword those who troubled peace would find German blows as heavy as they were twenty years ago.

Nominated only yesterday, the commission on the army appropriation bill met today. General von Caprivi desires to hasten the passage of the measure. The temper of the reichstag foorresponds with the composition of the commission, and will harmonize with the demands of the government, and the house will accord the full credits asked, and even assent to fix the effective for five years. HAS MADE A GOOD IMPRESSION.

The chancellor's appearance in the reichstag in the army debate enhanced the good impression previously produced by him. His adroitness in evading ticklish points is concealed by an appar-ent frankness of manner, and general bonhommie of style, which make his speeches pleasant even of style, which make his speeches pleasant even to opponents. He can joke, too, with effect. For instance, yesterday he provoked the reichstag to bursts of laughter by picturing soldiers driven from their old habits of love-making by necessary assiduity in military education. You see no more on the streets of Berlin, he said, soldiers promenading with their dear friends. On Sunday you may meet some, but time fails them to cultivate these joys during the week.

The budget committee, which has charge of the colonial estimates has practically approved them. The progress of Major Wissmann announced in telegrams which reached the government yesterday evening, will accelerate the committee's decisions. Wissmann reports the occupation of the country from Lindi to Mikindani without fighting, and the general submission of the Arab chiefs of the region toward Rovuma river. Wissmann is hopeful of securing an open route to Lake Nyassa. His arms will render safe caravan routes to the mission stations.

Major Lieber's statement of the certainty of splendid realizations from German investments in east Africa will assist in securing the ultimate approval of the bill by two-thirds of the whole house. He reports that at Bagomoyo there is an immense boom in the ivory trade and plantation business and a general rush of prosperity under the German flag. The prospective supreme value of the territories confirms the course of the government in requiring to coneede English claims which by the Germans would be cut off from contact with the Congo state.

Major Lieber, in a conference with the emperor, urged that in the future Central Africa would belong to Germany if the existing lines of the sphere of German influence were maintained.

OBSERVANCE OF THE SABBATH. The report of the permanent committee on observance of the Sabbath was referred to a special committee. It expressed regret that the committee had nothing of an encouraging nature to report.

Many things had been bettered as the result Many things had been bettered as the result of their work, but in their opinion the observance of the Sabbath was not retaining its hold upon the people as in former days. The general trend seemed to be in the direction of looser views of observance of the Lord's day. Ont of forty presbyteries to which they had written no more than a dozen reported an improvement in the keeping of the day. While it was generally admitted that a more faithful observance was noticeable among church members, it was not so in the outside world. Many seemed to think that day was for recreation and pleasure and not for sacred rest. The introduction of railroads, foreign travel and the prevalence of a looser view of the meaning of the scriptures were assigned as the possible causes. Newspapers vied with each other to make their issues on that day the most attractive.

The report stated that public conveyances were patronized on Sunday largely by church people. By way of throwing light to offset the dark-side of the report, it afforded the committee pleasure to state that the municipal laws in some of the larger cities were now better enforced and saloons were closed in some of them, and baseball games prohibited on Sunday.

Their Action on the Communication Asking for Organic Union.

St. Louis, May 17 .- To-day's session of the general conference of the Methodist Episcopal church south, was the last at which new business could be introduced, and it was unusually dull. The committee on fraternal correspondence, to whom was referred the communication asking the general conference to appoint commissioners to meet commissioners to be ap-pointed by the house of bishops and house of leputies of the Protestant Episcopal church for a conference on organic union, etc., re for a conterence on organic union, etc., re-ported recommending non-conference. It was held that the spirit of the church had always been broad and catholic. It had welcomed to imembership all who wished to be saved and had resolved to turn a new to be saved and had resolved to turn a new leaf, without regard to race or color. The policy would never be abandoned. As for organization with the memorialists, the committee would regard it as an evil. The church south had never divided from any church. The committee wanted those who had made the division to make overtures for reunion. The vote of the conference was unanim in favor of the report.

Terror of Cedar Keys.

Jacksonville, Fla., May 17.—A Cedar Keys special to the Times-Union says: Very diligent search is being made by United States marshals backed or aided by officers of the Cutter McLane, for Major Cottrell. This forencon Deputy Marshal LeStrange, with a detachment of officers and men from the cutter, went over to Atsenia Otil and searched several residences in that town. Failing to find the object of their search, the same proceedings followed in Cedar Keys this afternoon. A party, headed by a deputy and two officers, and having a force of fifteen men, fully armed and in uniform, landed from the cutter and proceeded through town to the residence of J. L. Cottrell, which they searched theroughly and then proceeded to the cemetery and woods lying beyond town; thence they crossed to the island of Piney Point and returned to Cedar Keys and to the cutter. No news can be gleaned from them.

The latter are a very poor crop, fall planting being nearly a complete failure. Some counties report only one-fourth of a crop. There will be a very large crop of apples, and no peach crop worth mentioning.

SIXTY MILES A DAY. Captain Tip Harrison's office is a rendezvous for old soldiers visiting Atlanta, and occasionally some very interesting experiences are told over there.

Yesterday quite an old man, Mr. Elliott, liv-ing at Virla Rica, stopped in for a couple of pension blanks. He explained that he didn't need any pension for himself—"though nobody fit harder'n I did," he said, "and they ains none of 'em po'er 'n I am now."

He mentioned, incidentally, that he had walked from Villa Rica to Atlanta the day "That's a pretty long tramp for an old man

"Oh, I walk that ever' little while," was the rejoinder. "Time was when I could make forty miles a day week in and week out. I was up here at Greenesboro when they surrendered, and I made sixty mile a day from there plum home. I felt mighty good when I got home,

THE DAMAGES ALLOWED.

Trains Must Stop While Stray Horses Cross the Track.

SMITHVILLE, Ga., May 17 .- John Summer ford won a case against the Central railroad for killing a horse, and was awarded $225 for the amount and $20 for interest. Late one afternoon when returning on horseback from where the hands were at work, Mr. Summerford found a lot of hogs in his oat patch. He drove them to where the land was boggy and drove them to where the land was boggy and he dismounted and tied his horse to a sapling. On his return he found that the animal had gotten loose and wandered off. He could not find it, though he saw by the hoof-prints that it had started off towards home and then must have wandered away. He took one of the negroes with him and hunted for the lost animal until nearly 12 o'clock that night. At last they discovered the dead body of the horse on the railroad track, where it had been run over by a train. Hence the suit and the damages awarded.

THE SUNDAY CONSTITUTION SENT TO ANY ADDRESS.

ATLANTA. GA., MAY 18, 1890.

The Democratic Executive Committee.
FORSYTH, GA., May 16.—The democratic executive committee of the state will meet on the 21st inst. at 11 o'clock a. m. in the capitol in the city of Savannah. to fix a time for holding the guber-committee such other on and to consider such other matters as may properly come before it. Eve member is earnestly requested to attend. ROBERT L. BERNER, Chairman.

The Constitution and Its Work.

THE WEEKLY CONSTITUTION goes to every state and territory in the union, to every city, town and hamlet in Georgia, and to more than a fourth of the post-offices in the United States!

A comparative list of post-offices prepared the other day showed some interesting things.

From the official postal guide it was learned that there are 58,984 post-offices in the union, and our regular mailing list shows that THE WEEKLY CONSTITUTION goes to 15,424 of those offices!

Just think what these figures mean. To every part of this great country, from ocean to ocean, from Canada to Mexico, THE CON-STITUTION is scattering sunshine, and through its columns the intelligence and the inspiration of the Piedmont region are radiating through the continent!

In this Atlanta is fortunate, and the con tinent has cause for congratulation.

Atlanta is fortunate because she is placed permanently upon the proud eminence to which she is entitled, and her great heart is kept in touch with the country from shore to shore. And surely those people are to be congratulated who catch the rising inspiration of a region that is destined to crown this continent with the richest industry and the noblest civilization that ever blessed this old earth of ours. To those who do not know their own country these statements may sound like exaggeration, but they are the words of truth and soberness. With resources the most magnificent and exquisitely varied that the world contains, and with a climate that permits in men the highest development of all that is strong and all that is good, with a soil generously responsive to the husbandman's touch, and with scenery that kindles the soul of artist and poet, this region, already attracting the eyes of the world, is laying, in the wisdom of deliberation, the foundations of the best type of society this world has developed. While the hot currents of immigration rushed past us, we have builded wiser than we knew, and there remains for us a tranquil greatness which the states populated in a decade will not

In carrying this happy inspiration abroad THE CONSTITUTION has the satisfaction of knowing that in every city, every town, every hamlet in Georgia it is read, and its great work is endorsed. Where was there ever a more magnificent confidence than this, coming up from every hamlet, almo from every hearthstone in the land?

THE CONSTITUTION grows wherever it goes. All it wants is a foothold. Away out in the Rockies it is climbing like the evergreen on the crags.

In California, where the gentle waves of the Pacific bring mystic echoes from the orient, it is carrying the best achievements of the new world. In Iowa, Illinois, Ohio, Indiana it has a firm foothold. Away out in the Indian territory, where thousands of Indians are reading it, what pangs there must be when they think of their happy huntinggrounds in the hill country, Georgia! In Texas there is an army of twenty thousand readers. In Alabama the paper goes to more than 1,500 of the 1,700 post offices.

But there is no use to particularize. It goes like the sunshine-everywhere!

Held by a Brittle Thread.

Men plan and work for the future with the confident expectation of enjoying the results of their labor.

It is passing strange—this confidence men feel in themselves and their work. They look around them and see sudden and continuous changes in the status of everything animate and inanimate. And yet the average man says to himself that he is an exception to the rule, and that his secure hold on his life, his faculties and his property makes it safe for him to risk the uncertain ties of the next day or the next year.

This is folly. Men hold everything by a rittle thread, liable to be snapped at any ne without a moment's warning.

Many years ago an eloquent orator in the t was addressing an enthusiastic eeting. Suddenly he paused, and put his and to his forehead in a dazed way. Then er a painful silence he said: "My friends, e Lord has wiped out my mind as with onge!" The tears streamed down his ee as he walked from the platform, a help-is imbecile with his proud intellect shat-red forever.

This incident has been recalled by the experience of Judge West, of Ohio, at burg, the other day. The venerable e has long been known as the eloquent When he opened his Pittsg speech there was nothing to warn him rs of what was coming. He uttered words, and sat down in despair. His ry in an instant completely deserted left his mind a perfect blank. He mself unable to frame a sentene ng upon the question he bad attempted the case of Judge West this sudden mental collapse is attributed to a strain upon his faculties caused by a family affliction hard brain-work. But the explanation is of slight interest. The appalling part of it is that just such a lightning-like disaster may befall any man at any time. The strongest man holds life, limb, property and faculties by the merest thread. He langus at the toddling infant, but he is every bit as help-less. He schemes and builds for tomorrow, when the next moment may see him a lump of clay, a pauper or an idiot. What fools these mortals be!"

The "Original Package" Business. There seems to be no doubt that the re cent decision of the supreme court relative to the right of a state to prohibit the purchase, exposure and sale of liquor from other states is a death-blow to state prohibition unless congress shall step in and take charge of the matter.

The judiciary committee of the senate has already reported a bill subjecting imported liquors to the provisions of the laws of the several states. This bill, if passed, will prevent the further establishing of "original package" saloons, an industry that is now in full blast in Iowa. It is to be hoped that the bill will be so amended as to include adulterated foods, obscene literature and the like.

Meanwhile, there is little likelihood that the bill will become a law, and if it is, it will not by any means fill the tremendous hiatus in state rights that the supreme court decision has made. This is of far more importance to the people of the states than the fuss made by prohibitionists or anti-prohibitionists.

When three democratic judges go so far as to declare that a state has no right to exercise authority over articles sold within its boundaries, prohibition and anti-prohibition become side issues.

English, Good and Rad

EDITORS CONSTITUTION: In the New York Sun of Friday, I find the phrase "assisted by a sub-servient and unscrupulous editor." Is this good

It is good enough English for every day use. A grammarian, who can criticize English, but who is unable to write it, would say that the phrase ought to be "assisted by a subservient and an unscrupulous editor," but the phrase as it stands is good enough for ordinary purposes. English grammar, which is taught in our schools to the confusion and despair of the pupils, is a finicky affair that bears very small relation to the art of English composition. The English language is not at all finicky. It is a glorious tongue, flexible, simple, dignified, eloquent and poetic. It is everything that a tongue should be, capable of conveying the sublimest as well as the simplest ideas, and possessing a body of literature which, in everything that goes to make up greatness and permanence.

has never been surpassed. It is to be hoped that our correspondent is not interesting himself too seriously in verbal criticism. It is not profitable either as a vocation, or as an avocation, and if pursued too steadily is apt to develop to an abnormal degree the bump of self-conceit. No man is master of the English tongue: no man can hope to be; but its study is none the less fascinating on that account. We advise our correspondent to study it constantly, persistently and humbly, but he will have to go to other sources than the multitude of grammars and essays of the verbal critics.

English grammar, so-called, is a comparatively recent invention. The best of which we have any knowledge is by William Cobbett. It is a grammar with a moral, and the moral is that knowlege of what is known as English grammar is not essential to a knowledge of English. The real grammar of the English tongue is unwritten and will re-

A few years ago, a worthy old Scotchman named Hodgson wrote and published a volume that is both interesting and curious. It called "Errors in English." up of quotations from the most famous writers. In each quotation is embodied a palpable violation of the rules of so-called English grammars. This volume is prepared with loving care, but what does it go to That the most famous writers of English were ignorant or careless? By no means. The volume constitutes a body of overwhelming evidence of the fact that those who have aided in making English literature famous and permanent cared nothing whatever for the finicky rules that hamper the schoolmaster and his pupils.

We commend this view to our correspondent and to all young people who aspire to write good English, or to obtain a fair working knowledge of the English tongue.

Senator Carlisle.

The election of Representative Carlisle to the senate is an honor worthily won, and no one doubts that the senatorial mantle will be worthily won. Senator Carlisle will carry into his new field the earnest convictions, the splendid courage and the qualities of leadership which have made him the stalwart and aggressive champion of democracy elsewhere, but it goes without saying that his party will sadly miss him on the floor of the house.

A student, an orator and a man of affairs a deep thinker and a hard worker, Senator Carlisle cannot fail to be in the future, as in the past, one of the potential forces of gen uine democracy. The career of Kentucky's favorite son will hereafter be watched with renewed interest.

Defending Damien.

Slander loves a shining mark. Father Damien, after sacrificing his health and finally his life for the lepers of the Sandwich islands, was hardly cold in his grave before a missionary named Hyde attacked his character with the statement that the leprosy of which he died was due to his vices and his slovenly habits.

Mr. Hyde's charges have been circulated in the newspapers, and Christian ministers have repeated them. Fortunately they were not generally believed. Men hesitated before they could make up their minds to condemn the dead priest, and at last Robert Louis Stevenson, the novelist, went to the islands and looked into the matter. Mr. Stevenson belongs to Mr. Hyde's denomination, but this fact has not influenced his judgment. He has written an open letter to Mr. Hyde in which he not only defend Damien, but attacks Hyde's character and conduct. He charges him with living a life of elegant ease as a swell missionary, living buxuriously in a fine house, and keeping himself aloof from the lepers and suf poor, whereas Damien gave up all the comforts of life, and worked in the midst of horror and misery until he fell a victim to his work of humanity and love. Mr. Stevenson denounces some of the nissionaries for their avoidance of self-sacrifice in their labors. He says that Damien was a man of pure and blameless life, and that Hyde's charges are a rehash of the drunken and vulgar gossip heard in the rum hops of the islands,

It will now be in order for Mr. Hyde to prove his charges or hold his peace in future if he is not willing to make a retraction.

The Elephant Fund.

The contributions to the Elephant fund yesterday are worth looking over. Along with them we print a gallery of interesting portraits of the energetic boys and girls who have taken it upon themselves to aid in getting a big elephant for Grant's park.

It is a lively set of youngsters, and there re more yet to come. Some of those who rought up lists yesterday want it under stood that they have just begun.

We are going to get the elephant, and the way to get him, is for the boys and girls to keep right on in their work. It is all for the enjoyment of the children, for the adornment of the park and for the glory of Atlanta

THE CONSTITUTION'S boys and girls should put in some lively licks during the coming week. If a grown person refuses to subscribe, he or she should be bulldozed on the spot. If a plain statement of facts, coupled with a little cuteness, doesn't do any good, then the system of bulldozing should be inaugurated. For there is no doubt about it (and we say it boldly), the person who refuses to give twenty-five cents for a sureenough elephant ought to be bulldozed.

As we remarked before, the boys and girls of Atlanta and THE CONSTITUTION are going to get an elephant for the park. This fact should not be forgotten.

Cotton and Silver.

There is one phase or feature of the silver discussion now going on in congress, that is of immense importance to the farmers of the south, and it is a feature that cannot be ignored by any careful observer.

THE CONSTITUTION is in the habit of reproducing from the Financial Chronicle the weekly review or summary of the cotton movement, together with a brief review of the state of the market in New York. Those who follow these reports carefully, cannot but be struck with the strong bond of sympathy that exists between the price of cotton and the price of silver. This sympathy is so insistent that it intrudes tself, so to speak, on the attention of those who have any interest in the market.

The fact has been established during th present silver agitation that the price of otton goes hand in hand with the price of bullion silver. In the Chronicle, week after week, may be found the evidence of this fact. "Owing to the advance in silver. the cotton market shows a strong upward tendency," or, "the price of cotton was lower today, owing to the postponement of the consideration of the silver bill in the senate." These statements are varied according to circumstances, but always and invariably the price of cotton moves in sympathy with the price of silver-is buoyant or depressed, according as the price of silver is up or down.

Now, this fact is not only interesting-in s significant and important. It shows that the price of the great southern staple is absolutely controlled by the gold single-standard countries of Europe. And it shows some thing more, namely, that the price paid for outhern cotton is based not on gold, but or the value of the Indian silver rupee in the British money market. In other words, Great Britain, by maintaining the single old standard. depressing the price of silver bullion, is enabled to deal with south ern planters precisely as she deals with the cotton-growers of India, and she has been aided in this nefarious business by the republican policy of the United States, which insisted on the demonetization of silver in 1873. Senator John Sherman pretends to be a great friend of silver now, but he was the author of the demonetization clause, and even now he, like all other eastern republicaus, is opposed to the remonetization of the white metal.

It has frequently been shown in these columns how Great Britain takes advantage of the depreciation of silver to depress the price of Indian wheat, the result of which is to depress the price of the American crop. but never, until now, has it been possible to so clearly illustrate the effect of the demonet ization of silver on the price of cotton. The influence of this pernicious policy has been so great, that even the favorable discussion of a proposition to increase the coinage of silver is sufficient to send up the price of the southern staple. The relation between silver and cotton is too palpable in the markets to be mistaken. No other product of this country has responded with such sensitive promptness to the agitation of the silver

This is so clear and unmistakable that there ought not to be any doubt of the attitude of the south on the silver question.

No Room for Doubt.

An exchange, which is disposed to doubt that the south is making all the progress claimed for it, hints that the developm boast is transient in its nature, a boom here. a boom there, and no enduring good any

This, of course, is not the case. While there have been booms, which have sprung up in a night and died down in a day—such as every section of the country has experienced from time to time, there has been a strong undercurrent of steady advancement such as there is today, which flows through all the channels of business and permeate every part of the land, and the solid prosperity to which the south has attained is the result of this steady and unretarded growth.

As far as what we call "sooms" are con cerned, they are well enough in their way: they are the natural outgrowth of the industrial enthusiasm of the people, and if some of them go the way of all flesh, many result in lasting good to the country—in the building of cities in the wilderness and the continued development of the resources of our prolific fields. It is but natural for a man, when he stumbles over a gold m ng jerk his coat, throw up his hat and s himself hoarse, and that others, hearing should flock around and take stock. This is a boom; but if the mine doesn't pan out well, of course, the boom dies and people

But the south goes on prospering. People who have once invested in her enterpris never let go their hold. From her sun-kissed hills and shadow-haunted valleys she has stretched white hands of welcome to the north, the east, the west-has bidden them all to the industrial banquet, and the guests are tarrying late and long. They are well satisfied with the feast served up to them; there is no doubt in their minds as to wheth er the progress of the south is real or not; for they are on the spot, and they know. Here are a few figures which give a glimpse of the growth of the south from 1880 to 1889; let them speak for themselves: Population from 14,639,714 in 1880 to 19,304,123 in 1889-32 per cent. increase; actual wealth from $5,725,000,000 in 1880 to $8,647,890,028 in 1889-51 per cent. increase; revenues of states from $13,201,866 in 1880 to $21,128,-633 in 1889-61 per cent. increase; bank capital from $92,575,000 in 1880 to $140,-553,637 in 1889-51 per cent. increase; railroad mileage from 17,808 in 1880 to 36,686 in 1889-106 per cent. increase; manufactories in number from 34,563 in 1880 to 66,136 in 1889-91 per cent. increase; and manufactured products increased from $315,924,-794 to $651,202,000, or 106 per cent.; total value of all farm products from $611,679,048 in 1880 to $868,979,523 in 1889-42 per cent, increase. A blind man cannot see anything, and there may be those who will find no inspiration in these figures. But they are eloquent, for all that!

It Was Well With the Child. Here's a little story in which one can almost see the hand of that mysterious

Providence which guides and guards our lives. A mother and her babe were seated in car on one of the railroads going out from Philadelphia. The woman sat near an open window, holding her babe in her arms. It was leaping and laughing, and clapping its hands as the train dashed on at a rapid rate of speed. Suddenly a sharp curve was rounded-the coach gave a lurch, and-out of the window went the baby-out, out into the arms of death!

But that was only as they thought. The distracted mother rushed to the door, and would have sprung from the platform, but the passengers restrained her; the bell rang, the engineer pulled up, and a hundred men went in search of the baby, expecting to find only its mangled remains on the road. But there, on a soft cushion of grass, it lay unburt, and laughing and clapping its hands still! It was nothing short of a miracle.

Perhaps, when from that flying train the baby fell to what seemed certain death, it was caught in the arms of an unseen angel and clasped to a breast as tender as its mother's. Who knows?

NATURALLY, Mr. Crisp will take Mr. Carlisle's place in the house

THE WEEKLY EDITOR'S DAY OFF

There is only one weekly editor in Georgia who works on Sunday, and he runs a Sundayschool in Cuthbert.

Colonel C. T. Davis has retired from the editorial and business management of the Heard County Banner, and is succeeded by Colonel P. H. Whitaker, Jr.

This is the weekly editor's day off: but the village choir presses him into service, and the parson makes him take up a collection. So, it may be said, he is busy all the time.

The Cordelean will print, at an early day, semi-weekly in connection with its weekly ined to keep pace with the grow ing town of Cordele.

Oglethorpe Echo: We have it from good authority that Hon. C. M. This he does not wish to do himself less he might be charged with being a self-constituted candidate.

There is fame for Judge Hawkins and usefulness, too, at the state capital, and the north Georgia mountains would be pleased and profitted by the prestige and popularity of such a senatorial representative.

-The executive committee of Madison county is to meet on the first Tuesday in June, and will doubtless call a primary to nominate state and county officers, to be held some time in August. As yet, there is very little talk among the county candidates, and most of the interest is centering upon the race for the lower house of the general assembly. It is pretty generally known that several prominent men will tannounce themselves subject to the decision of the democratic primary and it has also been hinted that an independent eral prot will oppose the choice of the primary.

EDITORIAL GOSSIP.

Parents wonder sometimes why their boys go wrong—boys who have been preached to an stuffed with moral maxims. The trouble is, in many cases, that the old folks do not know wha sort of literature the youngsters are reading. A runaway boy on his way to the west was arrested, the other day, and on his person the police found a revolver and a dime novel, entitled: "Old Kit Brandy's Deliverance; or Banner Ben, the Wild-fire of the Prairie." The interesting tourist can-didly admitted that he was going to Montana to kill Indians, rescue fair maidens, and find gold

The invenile readers of this column will be interested in knowing that the manager or director general of an elephant is called a "mahout." The what-you-call-it on the back of the animal, in which the riders are seated, is a "howdah." little ones are already visiting The Constitution office every day to catch a glimpse of their "mahout," and when they see him, they never fail to say "howdah!"

A man drinks, wastes money and lays behind the procession simply because he has got into the habit of doing these things. Another man is sober, economical and industrious because he has cultivated those habits. Moral bias has nothing to do with it. Frequently the fellow with the bad habits is a better man, when it comes to a test than his respectable neighbor.

Intellectual babits should be carefully watched.

I know a writer who, a few years ago, turned out an immense quanty of good work every day. Now he finds it difficult to do half as much. A change in his duties gave him more time and he gradually fell into the habit of slow work at an age when his rushing energies should be at their best. I know, also, another man who came to Atlanta apparently siuggish and slow of speech and action. Circumstances made it necessary for him to hustle, and in a few years he became noted for his ready and rapid methods. He talks, writes and works at the top of his speed.

But is this dashing way of thinking and acting as good as the other? Yes, when the man is bright, strong and well-equipped. It is all a matter of People down this way do not realize the magnitude of the southern boom. The northern papers are filled with descriptions of our new towns and reports of our land sales and new enterprises. In every northern state corporations are being organized for investment and speculation in the lands, mines and timber of the south, and people in distant localities are buying shares of stock in ocated in a region which they have never seen and never expect to see. The northern peo-ple regard the great west as a chestnut—they long for something new, and they are getting ready to turn their money southward. The danger is that unscrupulous adventurers will get up booms wi any solid backing, and overdo the thing. oms-her natural growth will advance her rapidly enough.

A federal election law in its worst possi A federal election law in its worst possible shape will not be worth the paper it is written on. During the reconstruction period there was a standing army in the south. Our people were poor and depressed by their defeat. They had to go to the polls through mobs of howling negroes and armed deputy marshals, knowing that their ballots would be tampered with by radical returning boards, and knowing that their papers, and knowing the their fadical returning boards, and knowing that their ing boards, and knowing, too, that federal soldie were within call to arrest or shoot them upon the slightest pretext. In the face of these difficulties they organized solidly, pulled together, and over threw the carpet-baggers and re-establishedihon-

What we did twenty years ago we can do mucl more easily now. The people of the southern states are going to manage their affairs if they have to devote their entire time and attention to the business.

Possibly there will be a little trouble occasionally. But what does it matter? It will all come right in the long run, and the war-time policy of the party in war-time policy of the party in power will result in the ruin of its champions. The American people will not stand an attempt on the part of the government to forcibly capture the ballot-box, and it will not be long before every federal outrage in the south with be as vigorously denounced in Maine as in Texas. Let the federal tion law come—the republicans may as well be shed that way as in any other way.

Judge W. T. Newman, 26 Capitol avenue, is the owner of a queer old relic. It is a pewter coin or medal, and was found a few years ago in Gwinnett county. On the other side is the liberty bell and the inscription, "Proclaim Liberty Throughout the Land, unto All the Inhabitants Thereof," with the denomination, "55."

As there was some pewter money issued in colonial times, many believe that this piece is a rare old coin, while some think that it is a medal, struck to commemorate the declaration of indeold coin, while some struck to commemorate the declaration of inde-pendence. But if it is a medal, why does it bear the denomination of five pounds? If this item strikes the eye of some coin expert who can tell something about this relic and its history, he may something about this relic and its history, he may erhaps be willing to give the public the benefit

THE WORLD OF FAIR WO

Some Things Against Which Women Who Work Have to Contend-A Singer Who Married a Prince.

Much has been said, and still more has been written, on that problem which is slowly and surely solving itself, namely the ways and means of women supporting themselves. The woman really in carnest in finding something to do, generally succeeds, not perhaps in the line she would prefer, or as renumerative as she would like, but if she has real merit, from a simple beginning she can fit herself for something more desirable.

One great drawback to woman's success is her instinctive dislike to do that which will throw her into company with illiterate, rough, mecongenial associates. There is in every woman's heart the feeling that somehow she ought to be tenderly cared for and shielded—in a measure, at least—from unpleasant things; and so to have to crush down this first little feeling, and put on a brave face, requires courage. Many women simply like to have some employment and be paid for it, and don't care to have their friends know anything about it; and then they do a little copying here, a little embroidery there, and "make a little pin-money."

Just how a woman makes enough to pay her to pursue such a course, is hard to bee. In order to make a success of a business—and now-a-days there is hardly a single kind of industry that a woman reay not with propriety. engage in hardly a single kind of industry that a woman may not, with propriety. engage in—a woman must give her whole thoughts and energies to it, until she has mastered its every detail. She must not rely on her personal charms or blue blood, or anything of that sort, to carry her through. However pleasant it may be to come of a good family, it avails but little in the race for bread. Of the two occupations are supplyed to women. tions apparently given over wholly to women,
well known that one-half of the women engaged in either make miserable failures, and while any an can learn to make a dress after her own rashion, few of the number engaged in that occu-pation make more than the merest living. As to keeping a boarding-house, she who would be suc-cessful in that must know how to work and how to make her servants do likewise, besides being economical and frugal.

Not long since St. Gaudens, whose name is familiar to artists and art-loving people all over the United States, introduced into his mixed classes the use of nude models. For several weeks no notice of this innovation was taken by the board of control, but finally the question came up and after an extensive debate the league declared itself opposed to the use of nude models in mixed classes in future in the schools. In answer to the classes in future in the schools. In answer to the request of Mr. St. Gaudens and a majority of his pupils, however, it was decided to favor the innovation until the end of the term, which will occur in two weeks. At the close of the meeting, the vice-president of the board of control, himself a member of the Art league, sent word to the director in charge, to pay no attention to the latter recommendation of the league. Just what the outcome will be cannot yet be determined. A number of the members of the board are violently opposed to the continuation of the practice even for the short time now intervening before the close of the term, and will spare no pains to prevent it. the snort time now inder variety and to be tended to the term, and will spare no pains to prevent it. The majority of the corps of instructors seem to oppose the use of fnude models before the mixed class of the league, which now numbers eight hundred members. The New York Tribune gives a number of interviews with well-known and successful artists upon the subject known and successful artists upon the subject which show a diversity of opinion.

The American woman is the fashion, and reigns supreme everywhere. With her consummate tact and skill, her vivacity and beauty, she has won her way easily into the foremost rank of queens of civilization. To her own charms she adds the luxury and refinement, which go hand in hand with the many dollars of her father, and having in her the best blood of several nations, the result is a woman as near one's ideal as this wicked world can produce. So per-haps it is not to be wondered at that the heroine of the latest novel, and the belle of Nice, should be the American, she who sums up the best of coquetry and andare which are thoroughly her own. In Paris, the American colonyhas grown to such an extent that a writer in a recent Revue complains that Paris entire has been Americanized. After ex-Franco-Americans, a writer says of Madame Charles Bigot, daughter of the well-known American portrait painter, Healy: She was born in Paris, and has passed all her life there, but speaks English fluently, though French is really her mother tongue, as it was the first language she spoke. She has been married for some years to the journalist, Charles Bigot, but still lives in her father's house, and is his most constant com-panion and friend. She inherits some of his artistic taste, and is clever with a pencil, having, however, still more ability with her pen; her lit-tic theatrical pieces, published under the pseudo-nyme of Jeanne Mairet, have had great success. Usually she has them acted first at her own use where are there all sorts of convenien r private theatricals, and where the amate of that art most do congregate. Then they are published, and have a great sale for amateur representation; some few of them having been acted on the professional stage as a lever le rideau. It is said that this type, the Parisianized American, is the most charming of all the many brilliant and agreeable sorts of women in that cosmopolitan capital. Another charming transplanted rose is Madame Blaze de Bury, who was born and educated in England, but ever since her marriage, a number of years since, she has resided uninter Tuptedly in Paris, and has become thoroughly Callicized. Even when her husband died, a twelve-month or two back, she felt no inclination to return to her native land, and while she writes in English occasionally she prefers to do her work in French. She has been from time to time Paris correspondent for the New York Nation and Tribune, and for the London Daily Telegraph. Much of her best work, in the Telegraph. Much of her best work, in the shape of reviews and sketches, has been published in the Reune des Deux Mondes, the owner of which, M. Charles Bulox, is her late husband's nephew. Despite her thorough acceptance of things French, her acquaintances are in the habit of calling her "the mad Englishwoman," because of her startling and witty bluntness, her queer standing her long residence in the very home of feshion displays the most old-fashioned insular taste, and her calm disregard of some of the mos hoary and reverenced French conventionality Everything is forgiven her, however, on the score that she is English, and therefore naturally and pelessly eccentric, and also beca propersity eccentric, and also because she is a very brilliant and agreeable woman. She has a sort of literary salon, and the younger aspirants for literary success court her assiduously, as a power very near the throne, and able to speak a good word for them to the powers that be in the Revue.

Nothing interests the housekseper—indeed one may say the average woman, for if she hasn't a home of her own, few women there are who do not expect at some time to have one—more than new styles and fashions of decorating. It is so easy now-a-days

When Queen Isabella of Spain was sent into exile Bismarck tried to put a Hohenzollern on the Spanish throne. Louis Napoleon opposed it, with an eye to a Bonaparte for the position. At the same time a strong coalition of the grandees of Spain favored placing Dom Fernando of Portugal on their country's throne, with all the chances in his favor. But while the grandees were content to have Dom Fernando their wives declared that they would never annear at court should the plethey would never appear at court should the ple-bean Bostonese be permitted to do the royal honors. A compromise was proposed in secret caucus—viz., to obtain from Plus IX. a divorce but Dom Fernando, rather than renounce Eliza Hentzler, put away the Spanish crown. Thus the indirect consequences of heroic attachment were the Franco-Prussian war, the downfall of Na-poleon III., the loss of Alsace and Lorraine to France and the still uncertain future of Spain. A romantic story, certainly. The king seems to have been a good, husband, so this singer was more fortunate than the American brides who

Of the Fulton County Sunday-School Association Army Mustered Yesterday.

Under the spreading boughs of a magnifi-cent oak in the front yard of the Howell homestead, at Howell's mills, the first regiment of Sunday school soldiers was mustered into service yesterday by President A. B. Carrier, commander of the forces, and Chairman E. M. Roberts, of the executive com-mittee.

It was a beautiful and impressive scene—one long to be remembered by all who witnessed it.

The school met in a commodious hall in the old mansion, the use of which is generously given to the association by Mr. Haley, and after prayer by Rev. W. J. Maddox, marched out of the hall down the road nearly a mile with flags and bouquets, making a beautiful sight. Returning to the elegant lawn, Rev. D. V. Stevens conducted devotional services, reading the 6th chapter of Deuteronemy and offering a fervent prayer for the school. Under the outstretching arms of the old oak a platform had been rected, beautifully it immed with wreaths of roses, and from it the speeches and recitations, well arranged into a neat programme by the superintendent, Mr. Rolader, were given, interspersed with appropriate music.

Just before dinner Mr. Roberts made a splendld talk to the children and then distributed enough candy among them to make them happy—and sick—for a week. President Carrier then explained the new method of organization, and, calling for recruits, every hand went up in response. Thus the Howell's Mill selected is duly mustared into went up in response. C. McMillan, forty varieties; Mrs. C. K. Maddox, four varieties moss-rose; Mrs. Dr. E. L. Connally, ten varieties; President Beatie, fifty-five, and Mr. James Burpitt, sixty varieties.

Well Done, Noble Judge.

Well Done, Noble Judge.

The decision of Judge Van Epps in the case of Mrs. Mande Jones will be hailed with delight by twenty millions of spiritualists in the United States as well as by well-thinking, liberty-loving people everywhere. Had Mrs. Jones been convicted then every person who preached an uncertain docerine might be tried by a miscellaneous jury, likewise convicted, and there would be no end to such persecutions. But this is not an isolated case. All history abounds in such persecution. Emin Daguerre, the eminent discoverer of the Daguerreotype, was imprisoned in a lunatic asylum because he said he could fix an image on a silver plate.

asymm because he said he could ha an image on a silver plate.

Thank God that Judge Van Epps had the courage to rule and speak as he did!

Such a noble utterance will be hailed with delight by thousands of mortals and by myriads of noble men and women in the spirit world. Spiritualism has come to stay. Millions know it to be true, and every person who will seek will find. Would you know that you will meet your loved ones after the change called death? If so, "Ask and ye shall receive, seek and ye shall find, knock and it shall be opened unto you." Seek such knowledge in your own way—even in the sanctum of your own homes. and ye will not seek in vain.

THE FEDERAL COURT.

The Wilson Case Against the R. and D.—The James Sult Against the Georgia Pacific— Reaves Arrested for Perjury.

That damage suit made by Miss F. L. Wilson against the Richmond and Danville rail-

The suit was filed in May, 1888, in the city court of Atlanta, where it was claimed that she had been internally injured while on a Richmond and Danville train at the car-shed by an engine running into the train. She was nocked down with a terrible blow.

The case was carried from the city court to the United States circuit court, and on May 9th it went to trial, resulting in a verdict of $10,000 for plaintiff. On that verdict a motion for a new trial was made December 20th, 1889, and a verdict for $11,000 for plaintiff resulted. The road made another motion for new trial, which came before Judge Newman yesterday. Before the motion was heard a judgment for $7,500 was agreed upon, and the motion for new trial was overruled.

A YOUNG PRISONER. Melvin Terry, a youth of about fourteen years of age, was in the federal court yesterday, having been arrested at an illicit distillery in Gilmer county. Assistant District Attorney Angier, finding that he was under sixteen years old, entered a nol pros., and he was discharged. He owned having had an active connection with the distillery.

A DEMURRER FILED. A demurrer was argued yesterday to declaration in the case of David Hart vs. the Richmond and Danville road, claiming that in the suit for $5,000 made by Hart, a brakeman on the road, the declaration did not show any cause of action on its face.

THE JAMES CASE A motion for new trial in the A. S. Jones case, against the Georgia Pacific, came up yesterday. It seems that Mr. James was hurt by a joit by an engine while making a coupling at the Atlanta depot, having his shoulder broken. A verdict for $3,400 had been given the plaintiff

In this case Mr. John A. Reaves, who testified as a witness for the Georgia Pacific, swore that he saw Mr. James in a fight receive the wounds charged to have been inflicted by the railroad. The evidence was so over-powering against his testimony it seems, that the United States grand jury has indicted Reaves for perjury, and a bench warrant placed him under arrest. He gave bond yesterday at $1,000. Butts, Reaves and James are members of respectable families in James are members of respectable families in EDITORS CONSTITUTION.—Dear Sir; Since the fire which recently occurred at our works in Elizabethport, N. J., we have received numerous offers of new sites for a factory, and many people whose time is of great value are going to trouble and expenses in getting up offers of special inducements and concessions. Will you permit us to use your columns in making such a statement as will save our friends and representatives from any further anxiety or trouble on this score.

No essential part of the machinery necessary to produce complete machines was destroyed. We are today turning out a full quota of all our regular and special machines and filling all orders in regular course.

We are already rebuilding the comparatively small section of the building which was damaged (all buildings save that one being untouched) and we are rapidly replacing the machinery for needles and accessories which was destroyed. Even of these we shall have a sufficient supply to fill all orders.

We therefore expect to carry on our works without material interruption just where they are, and any present attempt to remove would cause more inconvenience than the fire.

Atlanta Real Estate Exchange, 5 South
Pryor St. Atlanta, Ga.

AUCTION! AUCTION! IT MAKES NO DIFA ference how much unscrupulous real estate agents may talk and blow, the time has not come for Atlanta citizens to go three or four miles into the country to purchase property at city prices.
The rich man will not go into isolated places, and the ordinary citizen or poor man cannot afford to locate where he is obliged to spend one-eighth of his income in traveling back and forth to his business. For the strictly first-class citizen, we will offer on Tuesday, the 27th instant, at 3 p. m., at auction, eleven of those beautiful shaded and clevated lots in Mayville, on North Calboun St., two-blocks east of the residences of Mr. James Freeman, Mr. Clifton Anderson, Mr. Culpepper,
Mr. John Bain, Mr. Morgan, and others. Mr. Ed Peters, of the Peters Land Co., and ourselves are grading Calhoun street from Ponce de Leon avenue to Bleckly avenue, and when the work is fully completed, this will be a more fashionable drive than Peachtree. Before you leave the city for your summer trip, buy one or more of these lots, and they will double in value before your return. These are absolutely the only strictly firstclass lots on the market. There are no objection able features.

On Friday, May 30th, at 3 p. m., we will offer forty-one lots in Arlington Heights, fronting on Henry, Lee and Green's Ferry avenue, between Chestnut and Asiby streets. These lots are but one block from the Broad street car-line, and they are positively the only lots convenient to the business centers and close to the shops and factories.

We have removed all the old buildings which were on this property, and we now have a large force grading streets, etc. These lots will pay either the home-seeker or investor to investigate.

Remember the above dates, and be on hand to purchase.

Terme of sale: One-third cash; balance in six, twelve and eighteen months.

CONSTITUTION OFFICE.

ATLANTA, May 17, 1890.

Eusiness in securities has not improved materially since last week. Buyers and sellers are both scarce, and brokers complain of dullness.

State bonds have stiffened some in price because of the fact that Mr. Inman has been offered a round profit on the new 3½ per cent bonds. Considerable inquiries for Sayannah, Americus and Montgomery are abroad, but offerings are light, and it is predicted that they will sell at parefer. But coupons are paid.

The organization of the Atlanta Suburban Land company last Thursday night is a very strong one, and those interested are greatly pleased with the prospect of large returns on their investments.

Applications for several hundred shares more than was desired came in, and are still coming. The call for 50 per cent of the subscriptions to this stock were sent out but yesterday, and payments are to be made to W. H. Patterson, treasurer, 29 teast Alabama street.

close, but there is no reason to expect any unusual stringency. New York has had tight money this week, but speculators do not mind paying a high rate of interest as long as the market is active and New York exchange buying at par and selling at crease over those of last year, and as an example, the earnings of the Wheeling and Lake Erie for the second week in May were 35 per cent higher than those of the corresponding week of last year. The bulls also continue to fight shy of stocks of the warring roads that are cutting rates in the west. The market was unusually plentifully supplied with rumors for a short session, and among them may be noted that a deal favorable to Villard stock is to be consummated next week, which served as a basis for a most marked advance in the Northern Pacific and Oregon Transcontinental, which became features of the market after 11 o'clock. Others related to Reading and talk of a merge or agreement with other powerful companies, which has been so successful in raising the price of New England of late, was rife. It had the effect of making Reading the most active stock, its transactions exceeding those of any full day of the week, while a material gain was made in its price. The market started off with slight advances, but there was more selling of Reading and Grangers, apparently for foreign account, and Chicago Gas and sugar were weak, and retarded further improvement until the strength in Reading had been fully developed. Villards afterward joined in the upward movement, and later the advancing tendency extended to all portions of the list, and even trusts felt the stimulus. The bank statement, which had promised to be unfavorable, showed a small increase in the surplus reserve and helped to give the market a buoyancy toward the close, which was active and strong, in most cases at the best prices of the day. Trading reached 259,978 shares listed stocks and 45,208 unlisted.

The Day on the Floor of the New York Stock New York, May 17.—The stock market, even although today was a half holiday, managed to maintain the targe volume of business of the past week, and while the movement of prices were somewhat irreglar there was a strong undertone which, before the close, swept everything before it, and further advances resulted, while many stocks reached their highest prices for the week. The trundation of the bull movement—railroad carnings—continue to show the same material in-Exchange.

Hubbard, Price & Co.'s Circular.

NEW YORK, May17—[Special.]—The Liverpool market this morning was disappointing, sales being only 6,600 bales and futures partially 1-64d lower. Notwithstanding this, however, our market opened at last night's prices, and has distinguished itself by a rapid and almosé panicky advance in the July position and the months this side of it, the rumors of a corner having pretty thoroughly alarmed the bears, and the short interest proving much larger than it was believed. It is said that nearly 20,000 bales of our local stock is said that nearly 20,000 bales of our local stock will be exported during the present month, and the exceedingly light receipts to get here, with the generally bullish feeling prevailing and a decidedly more active inquiry from domestic spinners, have effected a decided revival of feeling. A further advance seems more than probable, as, independently of the course of the foreign markets, it is evident that the shorts are likely to have to scramble to get back the cotton they have sold tor summer delivery. New crops have sympathized but little in the improvement, the interest being main-ly centered upon the manipulation in the near po-sitions. HUBBARD, PRICE & CO.

The warm rains and summer near of the pass week have brought into bloom the trees, shrubs and gardens until all the city appears like a huge flower garden in its summer attire. hage nower garden in its summer attire. Each house on each street has something in the way of floral adornment, and the lawns of many homes give evidence of careful planning and attention. The rose is in full bloom everywhere, and transforms, with its clinging vines full of sweet blossoms, the stately mansion as much as it does the cottage. The magnolia trees, with their glossy dark leaves

The magnonia trees, with their glosy that a reason and pure blossoms, look like huge bouquets, as sentinel-like they guard the beds and bushes of their brethren lower in the world. A bed of pansies adorns the handsome lawn of a stately up-town house, and has been much admired. In all hues are straightful to the most delicate layender and and varieties, from the most delicate lavender and white to the glossiest velvet, they are a source of white to the glossiest verver, they are a source of rare enjoyment to the passers-by, with their fresh, little half-human faces. No less beautiful, but in marked contrast, is the arch of honeysuckle that graces the model little lawu of a modest little house on ster street. Over this arch the fragrant flower has run riot, intertwining its tendrils until the original foundation is entirely lost sight of, and it has become a bower of beauty.

Speaking of flowers, a writer in the Illustrated American, after describing at some length the Comtesse Raoul de Kersaint, says: "She has been the most conspicuous figure at Nice this winter, and her carriage, at the Battle of the Flowers, carried off the winter is the large wheels shelfs, harness, body and prize, it being, wheels, shafts, harness, body and top, a solid mass of pale Parma violets. What she must have spent on these decorations must have made the comte gasp, for even in the Riviera-one cannot get such masses of violets in one day without raying steady for them. She has set the one cannot get such masses of victors in our day without paying steeply for them. She has set the fashion of giving eleven-o'clock breakfasts in the open air under the warm blue skies of Nice, and looked like a dream of loveliness at them herself, inrigidly simple gowns of white serge, with big posies of pink rosebuds at her belt. She was the only woman who could make the men come t balls in knee-breeches, but she did it, and they

Such a very pretty fashion is that of the "standing vases," that are likely to rival the standing ing vases," that are likely to rival the standing lamps in popularity. Every season the florists have greater success in producing long-stemmed roses, and some of the crimson perfumed heads of the American Beauty flower upon a stalk three feet long. None of the ordinary vases were accommodated to such size, and to their great regret the happy recipients of such roses had to cut away a foot or two of the green foliage before they could be put in water. Out of this need has grown up the "standing vase," of pretty limitaaway a foot or two of the green foliage before they could be put in water. Out of this need has grown up the "standing vase," of pretty imita-tions of Venetian glass—a tall crystal trumpet-shape, whose broad base sits upon the floor, and which is at least four feet in height. The cir-cumference at the foot is very small, and at the lip the vase is searcely more than six inches across. Into these can be thrust the stems of the largest roses, and the effect of half a dozen huge roses acrosed in this way is more striking and largest roses, and the effect of hair a dozen ringe roses arranged in this way is more striking and decorative than four times the quantity of flowers disposed in any other manner. These vases are of pale milky blues and pinks, with futed lips, and are a very skifful imitation of certain sorts of Burano glass. It is the fashion of some to wreathe them with smilax or ivy.

Society at home may be rather quiet, but certain Society at nome may be rather quiet, but certain it is that the many society people abroad are hiving gay times. Mrs. Thornton, who is with her sister, Mrs. James Swann in New York, is being greatly feted and admired. Miss Grant is receiving an ovation as is her fortune always to no one's surprise, since she is one of the most attractive of Dixie's daughters, and has been ever since her debut an acknowleged belie.

The many Atlantians who are en route for the old world will undoubtedly be heard from at several American rendezvous, their movements will be followed with interest by friends in the city.

Lovers of beautiful and artistic pictures-watercolors in particular-will be charmed with the work of Mr. J. H. Garratt, who has recently come to Atlanta. His sketches are wonderfully realistic and fine, while no less true to nature are his water-colors of flowers in their many different hues. A small card of trailing arbutus attracted much attention at a quiet little display at an up-town house recently. Another of blue flag was very fine, while "Jack in the Pulpit," arranged in a conventional manner, was very unique and artistic. A deliciously cool and inviting picture is of mag-nolla buds, about which are a number of little green parrots busily chattering. Atlanta is to be congratulated on the accession of Mr. Garratt, who, it is said, will make this his future home, if his orders and engagements will warrant it.

Miss Jennie May Burke celebrated her ninth birthday with about forty of her little friends at the home of her parents, 45 West Cain street, from four to seven o'clock yesterday afternoon. Among the numerous amusements for the entertainment was quite a novel ante bellum South Carolina custom, the children forming a circle around a bon-bon-bag suspended overhead. Each blindfolded, with cane in hand, was given three strikes to burst the tissue bag, and when success ful there was a general scramble for the goodles. Dancing was also enjoyed. A birthday cake, in which was put a real pretty amethyst ring was provided. The successful slice winner was little George Burke, who raffled it out, and the one to carry away the ring was Miss Fannie Ludwig. The house was decorated with the choisest of flowers and the table laden with luscious yiands. Quite a number of handsome presents made the little mise glad. Among them was a handsome cabinet grand piano from her parents, an elegant hand-painted vase from Miss Lycett and brother. After an evening of much pleasure, the happy ones de-parted, each wishing Miss Jennie Mry much happiness and many glorious returns. Those present were Dollie and Ned Payne. FORREST ADAIR TALKS ABOUT SUB DIVISIONS THAT PAY.

When There Is Danger and When There Is Not-A Queer Instance at Chattanooga.

THE CONSTITUTION printed last Sunday an interesting interview with Mr. Forrest Adair, who showed that the price of central property was fully sustained by the increase of popula tion and manufactures and the large improvements now going up.

Today he talks of suburban property, which some think has been going too fast. It will be seen that he shows the suburban transactions

"In new would-be manufacturing towns, where the property is owned and controlled by companies whose sole object is to reap big profits on the land," said he, "there is danger of buyers being deceived by glowing descriptions and many promises and paying prices that are too high. But, in a town like Atlanta, whose future is just as assured as can be, and whose growth nothing can impede, there is no such danger.

"Then, another thing, the Atlanta buyers are too well posted on values to be deceived, and very few mistakes are made in purchasing. to be on a solid basis.

"I read a few days ago in the press dispatches, of a sale near Chattanooga, where buyers were bidding $600 to $700 for lots five or six miles from town, and the president of the company, realizing that the prices were far beyond the real or prospective value of the land, got up on the stand and announced that the buyers were a little wild in their ideas and that he would positively stop the sale unless they got down to a reasonable price. He knew that the effect of the sale at a fictitious price would re-act and do his company great harm.

his company great harm.

"Now such an occurrence could not possibly take place near Atlanta. Buyers are too well posted on values.

"A great deal of money has been made in Atlanta by parties who exercised good judgment in selecting well located tracts, susceptible of sub-division. then grading, improving, working out streets, and selling of lots at private sale or at auction at a profit.

"Three years ago we sold the entire land lot No. 121, consisting of 200 acres, to a syndicate for $32,000 cash. They at once spent $3,000 on it, working out streets, and improving it in many ways. They have since disposed of $40,000 worth of the land and have left 120 acres, worth at least $60,000.

"The DeGraffenried property, on Pearl street, was bought four months ago at $9,000 and the purchasers have sub-divided and resold for over $24,000.

"One year ago I carried a northern gentlemen out to West End and offered him property, which he declined at $11,000, and it has since been sold for $24,000.

"The Washington Heights syndicate paid $25,000 for their land, spent $12,500 on improvements, and the county chain-gang did an immense amount of grading. They have sold a portion of their land for over $50,000.

"These instances I have mentioned embrace first-class property. Property of that kind, or such as is in Inman park or Copenhill, will always sell at a fair price; but occasionally, when an owner cuts up a big tract, away out where there is nothing to particularly attract buyers, or to convince them of future enhancement, and puts up his lots at auction with a high limit, he just simply fails to get bids and don't sell, and nobody is hurt. "Yes, sir; property in or near Atlanta is worth every cent it will bring at auction, and will bring all it is worth. Parties now buying, where any judgment is exercised, will realize a good profit in the future.

"There is in my opinion, no danger now of over-doing the thing, for you will have to rise pretty early to get ahead of Atlanta buyers." NORTHERN SOCIETY.

A Lesson to Men Who Are Sure They Have Locken Up All Right.

From the Chicago Tribune.

It is a mistake for a man to be positive (says W. A. Pinkerton). I had a case put in my hands once the outcome of which left an impression on my mind. The treasurer of the Hannibal & St. Joseph railroad reported to us that their safe had been robbed of a large package of money. I investigated the case myself.

In reply to every question I put the treasurer he would come back with one remark—that he put the money in the safe himself, and that he locked the safe himself the day before the money was missed. The safe was in good condition when he opened it on the following morning, everything being just as he had left it the night before. He was certain that he put the money in the safe. He was certain that he locked the safe. He was certain that he locked the safe. He opened the safe. himself and the money was gone.

Everything about the man tended to confirm his statements. He was careful. He had no bad habits. He was well-to-do, and there was not the slightest reason for supposing that he could

In a few days I learned that a clerk in the office had remained at his desk after the departure from the office of the man who knew that he locked the safe. But I discovered that the clerk did not have the combination, and again I was at sea. A few weeks elapsed, during which time I kept my eyes on every movement of this clerk.

I saw enough to arouse my suspicion. I went to the office one morning and took charge of the clerk. I told him I was satisfied that he had taken the money and that he need not deny it. He broke down. He told me that the officer who was so positive that he had locked the safe on the evening in question had not done so; that he had gone away and left the safe unlocked; that he, the clerk, took out the package of money, closed the safe and locked. package of money, closed the safe and locked it. This he could do notwithstanding the fact that he couldn't open it. He handed to me nearly the entire amount. The officer who was so positive that he had locked the safe was dumfounded. After that he never was sure of his own name.

TRANSPLANTED GREATNESS.

es of How Many Men Find Fame Beyond the Borders of Their Native States.

It was Daniel Webster who when called upon at a Philadelphia banquet for a toast to Pennsylvanie's Hinstrious sons, responded: "I Pennsylvania's illustrious sous, responded: "I drink to the health of the great men of Penn-sylvania. Here's to Benjamin Franklin of Massachusetts and Albert Gallatin of Switzerland." The jest was not relished by Pennsyl vania, who could have retorted in like man ner upon Massachusetts, for the great orator and statesman of whom she was so proud was a son of New Hampshire.

But nothing more illustrates the cosmopolitan character of our civilization, and the kindness of each state to those who are her sons by adoption as those who are by birth, than the fact that so many of our illustrious men are not born in the community with which they are identified. The death of Senator Beck affords a strikiking instance. Since chilhood he had been in thought, feeling and action a thorough Kentuckian, yet he first saw the light in cold and foggy Scotland. But no one could ever think of him as other than a Kentuckian, and he was never anything else. Thus Henry Clay was born and reared in Virginia, and George D. Prentice was a Connecticut yankee, but there have been no better Hentuckians than these.

And while Kentucky has drawn some of her great men from other states she has given many in return. Illinois is justly proud of Abraham Lincoln, but he was born on Kentucky soil. Jefferson Davis was a Kentuckian by birth, but in history is a Mississippian.

Examples multiply with respect to other states. General Grant is credited to Illinois, but he was born in Ohio. Andrew Jackson, the great Tennesseean, was long the disputed product of North Carolina and South Carolina, though we believe the latter state has estabthough we believe the latter state has estab-lished the better claim. The brilliant Ser-geant Prentiss of Mississippia, the perfect type of a southern orator, flowery and impul-sive, was cradled among the snows of Maine. And thus the list could be continued indefin-

THE STERNBERG CONCERT.

The Programme to be One of the Fines Ever Rendered in Atlanta.

The programme that Professor Sternberg has arranged for his farewell concert next Tuesday evening at DeGive's opera-house, is said to be one of unusual merit and will open the eyes of Atlanta musicians. His support comes from the very best musicians in Atlanta and those who attend the concert, may do so with the assurance that they will hear something unusually good.

From present indications the opera-house will be crowded. The friends of Professor Sternberg will greet him on this, his last public performance, with a crowded house.

His lectures have been not only filled with the highest instruction, but simply delightful. He has been ever ready to give his services to any charity on hand. His pupils, wherever and whenever they are called upon, speak for themselves.

Mr. Sternberg proved what he was as a conductor in the Wagner festival, as the grand harmonies rolled out with a snap and vigor and precision which would have done credit to a practiced club, For the last time he will appear in Atlanta next Tuesday evening.
